U.S. Music Business Jumps 20% To $12 Billion In 1994

BY DON JEFFREY

NEW YORK—Music became a $12 billion business in the U.S. in 1994—20% above the previous year—with net unit shipments of music passing the 1 billion mark for the first time, according to figures released by the Recording Industry Association of America.

Fueling that growth were an increase in the number and size of retail stores and the continued rise in popularity of the higher-priced CD format.

The RIAA says record companies booked net shipments of 1.12 billion units of albums, singles, and music videos last year, an increase of 17.5% over 1993's 955.6 million units. The $12 billion figure—up from $10 billion in 1993—represents the dollar value of those shipments. It is calculated at suggested list price. (The figures represent gross shipments minus returns.)

The trade group attributes the sizable gains in unit shipments and dollar value mostly to expansion at retail. More and bigger stores, many of which are committed to maintaining a deep catalog of product, have boosted sales on the wholesale level.

But the RIAA's dollar value does not represent the amount that U.S. consumers spent on music last year, because the majority of product is sold at a discount to suggested list price. In addition, the RIAA's numbers do not take into account the inventory that remains unsold in stores.

Year-end results from market researcher SoundScan show that the total number of music units sold at retail last year increased only 4.4% to 713.7 million from 683.2 million in 1993.

An RIAA spokesman says the group's results are not indicative of retail sales but of activity among its

Norteña's Corridos Paint Underbelly Of Mexican Life

BY SAM QUINONES

MEXICO CITY—When Pancho Villa and Emiliano Zapata rode the deserts and hills of Mexico during the Mexican Revolution from 1910-17, blood flowed like a swelling river as the pair struggled to gain control of the country.

Trailing behind Villa and Zapata were songwriters who put the violent exploits of the two folk heroes to verse and music. These musical sagas, which came to be called corridos, were authentic depictions of the duo's raids against the government and their battlefield encounters.

Nowadays, corridos thrive in música norteña (northern music), a hybrid, polka-rooted genre from the northern Mexico/southern U.S. border, tied inexorably to colorful parables about Mexico's socio-political ills, such as drug-related violence, unemployment, and immigration. Artists performing norteña music are known

Goo Goo Dolls' Blue-Collar Guts

"These are people of incredible conviction—they will not budge," says Buffalo, N.Y.-born guitarist/singer Johnny Rzeznik of the Polish heritage that underlies the gallant roar of his band, the Goo Goo Dolls. "My ancestors were peasants from around Kraków who came to the East Side of Buffalo in 1913, right before the outbreak of World War I. From what I understand about Polish history, tanks would roll over these people, and they'd still live on, stubbornly praying the rosary. I admire that level of guts."

And it shows, grittily and gloriously, in every concussive facet of the Goo Goo's chronicles, as exemplified by the megapop band's incomparable fifth album, "A Boy Named Goo" (Metal Blade/Warner Bros.), due March 14. Masters of the hard-spanking melody line and other grand, aggressive gestures, this passionate power trio (chief songwriter Rzeznik, bassist Robby Takac, departing drummer George Tutuska, and tour replacement Mike Malinin) hails from the western extremity of the Niagara frontier, and the members' creative isolation feeds a combative tunefulness at the mighty end of the modern rock spectrum.

Slackerdom only occasionally is accused of generating anthemic uplift, yet at least half of "A Boy Named Goo" has the tense invigoration of the headiest video twitch game, plus enough thumping human tenacity to urge the alienated back onto the streets. Fight songs like the band-composed "Eyes Wide Open" or the Rzeznik-penned first single "Only One"—and his "Ain't That Unusual," "Long Way Down," and "Flat Top" (with its somber quip that "conscience keeps us quiet while the crooked love to speak")—are each exceptional in their undogmatic demands for restoration of a common dignity.

"What makes rock'n'roll worthwhile for me these days," says the affable Johnny, "is the real feeling that there's a musical movement right now that's part of an organic social movement. I notice all the kids have their bullshit detectors turned on, and that's a positive sign. Let's just hope the fucking marketing people leave us all alone."

In the case of the Goo Goo Dolls, they have so far been spared any commercial conditioning beyond a gradual upgrade in the sonic level of their releases. Their primitive "Goo Goo Dolls" debut on the Mercenary label was picked up in 1987 by Celluloid Records. Next came the "Jed" album on Death/Enigma (1989), which led to major-label visibility with "Hold Me Up" (1990) for Metal Blade/Warner Bros., a move coinciding with the stylistic enrichment of their punishing pop vision.

"Our influences are the Sex Pistols, the Damned, Devo, and the Plasmatics," says Rzeznik (the first "z" is silent), "and we wanted to do something with the same energy, but just a little more melodic."

By 1993's "Superstar Car Wash" record for Metal Blade/Warner Bros., the band's gleeful wall-of-gall approach to high-volume melliflence had attained a drenching new dither on tracks like "Fallin' Down" and "Already There." Here was a beautiful noise capable of resounding beyond the confines of the Great Lakes region.

But the Goo Goos still scrambled for rent money. Rzeznik was fresh off the road grind and "fooling with open tunings" in his East Side apartment a year ago, when he began plinking what would prove the apex of "A Boy Named Goo." A distressed acoustic rocker called "Name" is "about the difference between being 15 and 28" in a youth culture that sacrificed its sense of purpose: "You grew up way too fast/And now there's nothing to believe/And re-runs all become our history."

Like so much of "A Boy Named Goo," "Name" describes a generation suspended between the Old World and the Lost World. "I was 15 years old and majoring in plumbing at McKinley Vocational High School in Buffalo, when I started writing songs with titles like 'I'm Not Gonna Run,'" Johnny recalls with a soft laugh. "I didn't want to do dog work for the rest of my life, but I lived in an ethnic, working-class place that was a real throwback. Still, my grandfather was the kinda guy who had actually helped arrange—not entirely legally—for people to get their passports to America. So the challenge is to find a way to dig deeper inside yourself for a new direction."

Born Dec. 5, 1965, to postal clerk Joseph Rzeznik and the former Edith Pomeroy, Johnny grew up with four older sisters on Clark Street near the corner of Kent Street ("We called it the Superman corner").

"My family opened a bar on the East Side when they first got here," says Rzeznik, "so I was used to being around self-employed merchants, which is how I decided to be a plumber. The year I turned 15 was rough because that's also when both my parents died; my father was a bad alcoholic who died from drinking, and my mom was gone six months later 'cause she was so lonely. If it hadn't been for my sisters, I wouldn't have made it." And if it hadn't been for rock'n'roll, Rzeznik wouldn't have had a reason to try.

New York state's second-largest city (pop. 357,900), Buffalo began as a key Erie Canal port whose post-Civil War trade boom attracted hordes of immigrants and industrialists. The tough, frequently snowbound blue-collar outpost was plagued in recent decades by unemployment, but lately has regained its former boom status due to a tariff-lifting 1989 trade pact with Canada; Buffalo remains a sports- and tavern-loving party town whose 4 a.m. bar closings often prompt 5 a.m. traffic jams on the bridges back to Ontario.

"Frankly," says Rzeznik, "I was 19 and drunk the night we started the Goo Goo Dolls. I'd worked as an assistant plumber for only one day, when I quit and enrolled at Buffalo State U.; I was playing in the Beaumonts, a hardcore group named for [actor] Hugh Beaumont [the father in TV's "Leave It To Beaver"] when I met Robby [Takac], who was in my cousin's metal band. We jammed and drank and named our new group after this spooky toy we saw in "True Detective" magazine, a baby's rubber head you moved with your fingers."

And "A Boy Named Goo" shows how far such game impulses can take gutsy young citizens of the Blizzard City.

"No matter where you're from, you've still gotta learn to keep your perspective," says Rzeznik. "When I wrote 'Only One,' some people thought it was about Kurt Cobain's death, but it was inspired by a Buffalo rock star who got into bad stuff. Fact is, that kinda thing happens to anybody who gets high on their own fumes."

"Our music is saying that it's best to keep yourself more process-oriented than outcome-oriented," he adds with unbudgeable surety. "If you can somehow do things from the bottom of your soul, but not get hung up dwelling on them, then that's a good, unselfish feeling."

Jazz's Rich Legacy Deserves Support

BY GERI ALLEN

During Black History Month the country joins African-Americans in celebrating our vibrant culture, one that is full of inspirational stories of the human capacity to not only survive unthinkable tragedy, but to shape and create new and imaginable beauty from it.

As a child I heard my father's record collection over and over: Billie Holiday, Charlie Parker, Nat "King" Cole, Thelonious Monk, Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, Sarah Vaughan, Mary Lou Williams. These great artists were then, and will always remain, beacons of light for us as a people and for the world.

I experienced these masters as a child and watched their carriage and projection closely. In the midst of all the indignities they experienced, I saw only their strength and impeccable dignity, and heard their innovations in music, which continue to transform the world even now. They were connected to their culture. There was a lifeline between the community and these artists; one fed and kept the other.

Each of these artists, while completely unique in his or her individual expression, was also firmly rooted in the jazz tradition. This linkage extends back to Jelly Roll Morton and beyond, to Africa. Jazz is an oral and written tradition. The music is passed down from generation to generation, with each of our greatest artists assimilating all the information and techniques from his or her predecessors. Each achieved an individual voice by the nature of the creative choices he or she made. Each of these masters, the ones who remain close to the front of our consciousness, made big choices. And the choices they made were often responsible for the major shifts music has taken in the last 100 years. Informed choices, and the quality of those choices, creates innovation.

Choices represent true freedom. This connotes not having to settle for the choices others would have made for you. I made a choice: to experience jazz. I had other choices, but I loved jazz and all it stood for. The artists, the innovators, and the personalities inspired me. Yet the magnitude of who they were, and are today, continues to humble me. I am a fan of this music. I love the timbres, the rhythms, and the varieties of expression that are elemental to the richness of it.

When I was 6 years old, attending Hally Elementary Public School in Detroit, I took a beginning instrumental class. We had a variety of string, woodwind, brass, and percussion instruments to choose from. Exposed to all these instrumental possibilities, I eventually found the right instrument for me: the piano. I was 7 when I began piano lessons. The piano was the instrument, literally and figuratively, for the formation of my understanding of commitment. Early exposure to music provided a foundation for the development of my ability to commit. Commitment and her sister, perseverance, create opportunities.

Music, although an excellent one, is not the only path to be followed for the development of life traits. All of the creative arts share this harmonious chord. And sports certainly cannot be excluded. Anyone who has witnessed Michael Jordan in action would be hard pressed not to acknowledge his performance as art. The parallelism should be obvious.

'Choices represent true freedom.'

Gerri Allen is a jazz pianist and Blue Note recording artist.

Where do most children first encounter the opportunity to start making these choices for themselves? Public schools. Unfortunately, our music, art, and sports programs are the first to be leveraged in times of financial crisis, and children suffer the loss of these choices. Lack of choices only limit one's freedom. These choices should be made available as early as possible.

Public television and public radio are also extremely vital sources of information and knowledge. These give us equal access to what's going on in the world of the arts. These are our lifelines to our communities. In the midst of this very conservative climate, we once again hear talk of the loss of choices. The possibility of losing public television and radio is ever-increasing. Both of these media have afforded us the advantage of experiencing some of the many artistically diverse alternatives available. These two sources of expression are invaluable. All who believe in freedom of choice should heighten their commitment to keep our public access systems on line by providing even greater support.

Let us also recognize the nonpublic, risk-taking entities, both radio and television, that are committed to supporting lore that is far too seldom heard or seen. Black Entertainment Television's Jazz Central features live jazz, for example. The response to Jazz Central has been overwhelming, and ratings are continuing to grow. And I could never forget the countless hours spent listening to WJZZ, "Detroit's Jazzy One."

At its greatest, music is a beacon of bright light reminding us of the best parts in ourselves. The creative arts have done that throughout time. We go into trances, transcend the physical plane, to find our identity. We recognize in those moments of connection a way of being. We prepare to meet those splendid moments of realization by fighting to stay above the surface, working a band, recording an album, making the music in large and small crowds. Artists experience these challenges to connect with people, because it is this connection that allows music to live vibrantly. As I travel and perform, I see it in the faces of the people who make time to come and participate in the moment. Jazz has always been a musical culture that was inclusive and full of variety. This welcoming nature comes from its African-ness, and that is a part of its greatness.

As Michigan Congressman John Conyers reminds us, jazz is a national treasure. Let's celebrate our living legends in jazz, our icons, our innovators and masters who remain to inspire and enlighten, and those new innovators and masters who represent the future of jazz. Let's give back to the source in a true spirit of celebration.

AMAZING BREADTH OF MUSIC

I was recently sorting my back issues of Billboard. Out of curiosity, I looked up a bunch of "Music To My Ears" columns. What an amazing breadth of music Timothy White has chosen to write about. I think it is so cool that the editor in chief of the trade-publication-of-trade-publications chooses to devote his column each week to music where the sole criteria is that of quality, putting genre and the size of the issuing label aside. Hats off to you for giving voice to music that is inclusive, nonsexist, nonhomophobic, nonracist, etc.

I also wanted to take the time to let White and his staff know what a huge, amazing, tangible difference his column has made in our work in spreading the word about Dar Williams (Billboard, Jan. 28). For music not aimed at the mainstream of pop success to receive notice from you guys makes a big, big difference for us down here in the trenches.

UNDERGROUND OLDIES?

Let me make sure I got this straight. According to your story on WDRE's format change (Billboard, Feb. 11), the station dramatized its switch to "underground" by interrupting a 15-year-old recording and replacing it with a 17-year-old recording. I suppose in the world of radio programming, this passes for progress.

SANTA AD HITS HOME

I saw the commentary by Dick LaPalm (Billboard, Jan. 28), and it reminded me of where I was when that ad came out. I was a hawk at times during the Vietnam War, but when I saw that ad it really affected me. It was like a bucket of cold water thrown in my face. I suddenly saw the war for what it was, an unfortunate debacle that would take a decade or two to straighten out. I, at that moment, gave peace a chance. My hat went off to LaPalm then, and I am so glad he's still in the business. He truly understands.

Label Reps Urge Europe To Fight China's Piracy

■ BY JEFF CLARK-MEADS

LONDON—The international record industry is pressing the European Union to raise the stakes in its battle to persuade China to clamp down on pirate-music product.

International labels' body IFPI says the 15-nation Union should emulate the tough stance adopted by the U.S.

A delegation from the IFPI met in early February with the EU's trade department, DG1—a department headed by British former minister Sir Leon Brittan—and was told that the Chinese piracy problem remains a priority.

This assurance, though, is barely satisfactory to the labels' representatives. IFPI director general Nic Garnett, while pleased that the department takes the matter seriously, says, "We want a more committed approach, a more visible approach. We told DG1 we want to see a more aggressive and more vigorous position from the EU.

"We expressed concern to them that the world is viewing this as an American problem, but there is very significant European involvement because three of the majors are European corporations."

To date, the Union has adopted a low-key attitude, preferring to exert subtle political pressure on China through the nascent World Trade Organization rather than implement sanctions under its Commercial Policy Instrument, the so-called "European 301."

However, the tenor of the EU's activities may have changed with its Feb. 15 public pronouncements that it supports the more overtly aggressive policy of the U.S.

The test of its intentions will be whether the Union decides to commit to the problem with the same magnitude of resources as U.S. authorities have. At present, the amount of time and effort being applied in the U.S. is far greater than that in the Union.

Garnett says, "It's pleasing to know we have the support of Sir Leon and that he has this high on his agenda, but he has many other issues to deal with in many other parts of the world."

Garnett says meetings with DG1 are continuing—as they have done over the last two years—and he is hopeful that the music industry may be on the verge of new initiatives in the battle.

He points out, though, that it is not just the music industry that is suffering. He maintains that the approximately 30 optical-disc pressing plants in China are capable of producing CD-ROMs and movies on laserdisc, and he describes the plants as currently "out of control."

The first priority, Garnett maintains, is to persuade the Chinese authorities to implement copyright law and bring legal control to the plants.

He fears, though, that this may not be the way the authorities assert their power. "My great concern is that they will make an example of somebody and execute them for piracy," Garnett says. "That is not what we need. We need consistent enforcement."

RIAA Names 3 Piracy-Infringing Nations Bulgaria, Indonesia, Turkey Could Face Sanctions

■ BY BILL HOLLAND

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The Recording Industry Assn. of America, in cooperation with the International Intellectual Property Alliance, named Bulgaria, Indonesia, and Turkey as the most serious global copyright infringers in a Feb. 15 trade filing.

The IIPA filed its report with the U.S. Trade Representative, calling for an immediate review of trade policies with those nations.

(In a related development, RIAA President Jay Berman told Billboard that Bulgarian officials visiting here on a trade mission Feb. 14, after hearing about the IIPA filing, made a pledge to close a factory that produces more than 20 million pirate CDs a year, which are shipped to all parts of Europe, the main reason Bulgaria tops the list of infringers.)

China, which already has triggered an announcement of U.S. tariff sanctions after failing to meet a Feb. 6 negotiations deadline for the closing of 29 illegal CD plants, is also on the top-pirate nation list. It now faces a Feb. 23 deadline for imposition of sanctions

Vid Stores Hedge 1st-Quarter Buying Tide Of Xmas Returns Begets Reluctance

■ BY EILEEN FITZPATRICK

LOS ANGELES—A wave of conservatism has swept over video dealers' ordering patterns in an attempt to avoid the flood of top titles that nearly drowned retailers in late 1994.

Although most retailers say overall sales were strong during the holiday season, some big-name titles failed to meet expectations.

As a result, the fourth-quarter cleanup continues as retailers return millions of copies of "Jurassic Park," "Snow White And The Seven Dwarfs," "The Flintstones," and "Beethoven's 2nd."

To combat the flood of returns, MCA/Universal Home Video says it will drop the price of "Jurassic Park" from $24.98 to $14.98 Feb. 24.

The title also will be repromoted to coincide with NBC's May 7 telecast. Details of the re-promotion are expected in April (Billboard, Feb. 11).

The supplier reduced the price of "The Flintstones" ($19.98) and "Beethoven's 2nd" ($24.98) to $14.98 Feb. 6.

But MCA is enjoying an 85% sell-off rate for "Land Before Time II: The Great Valley Adventure," which has sold through its initial order of 2 million units with reorders of 600,000 units, according to distributor sources. The title was released Dec. 26.

"The initial buy was conservative," says MCA VP of marketing Craig Relyea. "But reorders have been consistent and strong."

Relyea credits the after-Christmas release date and McDonald's sale of the original "Land" as contributing factors. "Having a new title in stores during a peak traffic period and McDonald's refreshing consumers' minds about [the original] worked," Relyea says.

New Line Home Video VP of sales Kevin Kasha reports a 48% sell-off rate for "The Mask," of which 7 million units were shipped in January.

But, like MCA, Kasha says retailers held back on orders until the last minute. "A number of accounts were disappointed with some fourth-quarter titles, and our orders weren't as strong at first," says Kasha. "It wasn't a 'Mask' issue: It was an open-to-buy and a shelf-space issue."

Confident with the title's performance, New Line has set up reorder patterns with its key accounts, Kasha says.

Despite increased shelf space and an overall profitable holiday season, retailers and suppliers have toned down their first-quarter goals.

"Retailers were skittish and bought more conservatively on first-quarter titles," says Sacramento, Calif.-based Video Products Distributors senior VP of marketing and purchasing Marty Jorgensen. "There were some problems in the fourth quarter, and because of it you saw more reasonable goals and lower expectations."

The most notable example of that is "The Lion King," which by most accounts has the potential to top both "Beauty And The Beast" and "Aladdin." Combined sales on the two titles are more than 43 million units, according to Buena Vista Home Video.

However, as previously reported Buena Vista will ship about 18 million units of the title and hold back between 20% and 30% of preorders in an

Video Chain Choices Rolls Along On Buying Spree

■ BY SETH GOLDSTEIN

NEW YORK—Regional video retailer Choices Entertainment has landed its biggest catch in a yearlong quest to transform the 10-store venture into a national power.

After a string of agreements reeling in about 15 chains of similar size, Choices announced Feb. 13 it had signed a nonbinding letter of intent with Palmer Video in Union, N.J., which owns and operates 46 outlets in New Jersey and New York. Palmer, with estimated revenues of $25 million, had topped the industry's list as the chain most likely to go public in 1995, following in the footsteps of Portland, Ore.-based Hollywood Entertainment.

Instead, Palmer leads the pack of five arrivals bringing Choices' store count to 264 and combined sales to $125 million. The remaining newcomers have not been named, but trade sources indicate Video City in Bakersfield, Calif., is one of them. CEO Robbie Lee was not available for comment at deadline.

If the purchases go through by late summer, as the parties anticipate, Palmer president Peter Balner will join Choices as executive VP. Landing Balner, a board member of the Video Software Dealers Assn., gives Choices the credibility observers say it needs to maintain expansion momentum. Balner, who reportedly has had discussions with other acquisition-minded retailers like John Taylor of Tonight's Feature in Columbia, S.C., should also help attract the rest of the money needed to close the deals.

"We have some financing already in the bank," says Choices VP Donald Ross. "More is being discussed." Ross and partner John Maioriello run Los Angeles-based J.D. Store Equipment, which is buying out Choices, headquartered in Morrisville, Pa., and is masterminding the purchases that have put Choices comfortably ahead of Tonight's Feature and Giant Video, also on the acquisition trail.

"Taylor won't have sufficient size to play," even though he recently signed two chains (Billboard, Feb. 18), says another retailer. With 1995 sales of $40 million-$50 million, "he's a distant third," this executive adds. Giant Video is slightly bigger at $60 million. By comparison, Choices may be close to $200 million by year's end, excluding J.D. Store's estimated sales of $18 million-$20 million.

To complete the transactions, publicly traded Choices is issuing 15 million shares of common stock to complete the J.D. merger, 72 million for the 21 chains now committed, and $55 million in cash. Choices currently is quoted at about $1.50 a share on the Nasdaq Electronic Bulletin Board, bringing the total outlay to about $163 million, or 1.3 times revenues.

Most Wall Street analysts consider that ratio reasonable, although Dennis McAlpine of Josephthal Lyons & Ross in New York suggests the low-priced stock could be a problem. "Clearly, there's a bunch of financing to do," he says. Where possible Choices is paying with shares, offering cash only for the best properties, sources indicate.

By that standard, they say, cash ought to be a good portion of Balner's payment, especially since he can enlist

Winwood Gets 'Finer' With Island Boxed Set

■ BY PAUL VERNA

NEW YORK—One of the most gifted and mercurial artists in pop music, Steve Winwood, has had his share of accolades in his 30-year career, but until now he had never been honored with that distinction bestowed on so many other musicians of his caliber: a boxed set.

All that will change on March 21, when Island Records—the label for the bulk of Winwood's work—plans to release a four-disc retrospective titled "The Finer Things," after Winwood's 1988 hit.

The set spans the entirety of the British artist's career, from his prodigious beginnings as keyboardist/vocalist/songwriter for the Spencer Davis Group, through his groundbreaking work with Blind Faith and Traffic, to his fusion experiments with Stomu Yamastha's Go and Winwood/Kabaka/Amao, and culminating

Guided By Voices Debuts On Matador Lo-Fi Pop Act Not 'Alien' To College Crowd

■ BY CRAIG ROSEN

LOS ANGELES—Veteran Dayton, Ohio-based cult band Guided By Voices is primed to come up from the underground this year with the release of two albums of new material and a boxed set featuring some of its early work.

On March 14, the band will make its debut on Matador with "Alien Lanes," a sprawling 28-song collection of psychedelic-flavored pop, recorded with GBV's trademark "lo-fi" production.

GBV also is working on another new album, tentatively due in October or November, which is being recorded mostly in 24-track studios with Kim Deal of the Breeders serving as producer.

Meanwhile, St. Louis-based independent Scat Records is releasing "Box," a six-LP/five-CD boxed set, Feb. 28. The vinyl version contains six LPs—1987's "Devil Between My Toes," 1988's "Sandbox," 1989's "Self-

GUIDED BY VOICES

Inflicted Aerial Nostalgia," 1990's "Same Place The Fly Got Smashed," 1992's "Propeller," and an additional album of 10 unreleased tracks from 1989-94, dubbed "King Shit And The Golden Boys." The CD version omits "Propeller," which is available in its entirety on the CD of the 1993 album "Vampire On Titus."

"Box," which will be manufactured and distributed by Matador, will carry a $50 list price for the vinyl and CD versions. Only 300-500 of each of the original albums featured in "Box" were pressed at the time of their initial release.

Despite all the action, GBV vocalist Robert Pollard only recently quit his day job as a fourth-grade teacher. "Last year was one of the toughest years of my life," says Pollard. "I had to try to teach, do lesson plans, and grade papers, and at the same time I had to work tours and do interviews. It was just too much."

It was in the summer of 1992 that the band first began to garner attention. Robert Griffin, owner of Scat, was visiting the retail store Used Kids Records in Columbus, Ohio. "One of the guys that worked there suggested that I talk to Robert [Pollard]," he says. After the initial contact, Pollard sent Griffin a copy of "Propeller," which the band had recorded for its own Rockathon label.

Adelphi/Genes Starts Issuing 50-Volume Blues Vault Series

■ BY CHRIS MORRIS

LOS ANGELES—Thirty years ago, Gene Rosenthal was a record collector who used his reel-to-reel tape equipment to copy rare, expensive blues 78s. He soon branched into recording the long-lost country blues performers who were being rediscovered in the heat of the '60s folk-music boom.

Today, the fruits of Rosenthal's youthful labors are at last becoming available in a series of packages of previously unreleased recordings on the Adelphi/Genes Blues Vault Series. This major work of blues archaeology by the Silver Spring, Md.-based label ultimately could run to over 50 volumes.

"This is like a five-year release schedule we're looking at here," Rosenthal says of the Blues Vault effort.

The collections will help sate the appetite of a devoted, growing cadre of country-blues listeners, many of whom were first alerted to the genre by the 1990 CD release of Robert Johnson's seminal "The Complete Recordings," now certified platinum.

"It's a steady market," David Starr of the roots-oriented retail outlet Antone's Records in Austin, Texas, says of the country-blues buyer. "When an album on an artist who's a bit better known like Skip James or Robert Wilkins comes out, you see a little more interest. There is definitely a dedicated market for it. It's always going to be a steady seller."

To date, the Blues Vault Series has released five albums: a two-CD "Memorial Anthology" devoted to Avalon, Miss., patriarch Mississippi John Hurt, which includes an interview with Hurt conducted by Pete Seeger; "She Lyin'," a set by Bentonia, Miss., titan Nehemiah "Skip" James; "Remember Me," a powerful collection by Memphis' bluesman-

RCA Revitalizes Jazz Rosters, Imprints Bluebird Restarted; Groovetown To Be Launched

■ BY JEFF LEVENSON

NEW YORK—In a restructuring aimed at sharpening the musical identities of its jazz imprints, RCA is reactivating the Bluebird label and establishing a new imprint, Groovetown, as well as refocusing its other two labels.

Each label—Bluebird, RCA, Novus, Groovetown—will emphasize a specific subgenre of jazz. The labels will be run by national director Paul Ramey and A&R director Brian Bacchus, with marketing and promotion to be handled by RCA's existing staff.

"We're attempting to revive the presence of jazz at RCA," says Ramey.

"The idea is to sign new artists and reorganize so that we become full-service, tapping four distinct kinds of jazz—archival, contemporary, straight-ahead, and soul-funk—and present them to their respective audiences."

Bluebird, the oldest of the imprints, was founded in 1932 and for the last two years has been compiling archival material, but has had no program of steady releases. The label, devoted to reissues, was officially reactivated in January with titles

Four additional releases are scheduled every other month; the next batch, in March, is to include works from Ellington, Fats Waller, Muggsy Spanier, and Benny Goodman. Celebrated producer Orrin Keepnews is commandeering the reissue program.

The RCA imprint, which will emphasize the contemporary side of the jazz roster, will feature two new arrivals: keyboardist Alex Bugnon and singer/

Duran Duran Gives 'Thanks' To Fans Band Covers Wide Range On Capitol Set

BY LARRY FLICK

NEW YORK—Duran Duran bassist John Taylor says the title of the venerable pop act's forthcoming set of cover tunes, "Thank You," is more than an expression of gratitude to the bands that influenced him and his cohorts.

"We are just so damned thrilled to be putting out another album," he says with a laugh. "Strange as it may sound, the experience of completing a project that actually finds its way to the public is incredibly spiritual and somewhat humbling—even after all of these years. Recording these songs, which have always meant so much to us, just made the process all the more a tingly, exciting experience."

Taylor says the group's Capitol album, which is slated to hit retail April 4, was initially inspired by Bryan Ferry's "These Foolish Things" and David Bowie's "Pin-Ups," a pair of renowned cover albums that were released in 1973. "We wanted to bring a different energy to familiar songs, while also paying proper tribute to those who have given us the inspiration to make music," he says. "Those albums were perfect examples of how that can be accomplished."

The seeds of "Thank You" were planted in 1992 during the sessions for their last long-player, "The Wedding Album." After pruning down what Taylor describes as a "mile-long" list of potential selections, the act began to cut tunes in different cities while on a 16-month world tour.

The songs on "Thank You" span several genres. Classic rockers, such as Bob Dylan's "Lay Lady Lay" and "Crystal Ship" by the Doors, are placed alongside interpretations of hip-hop anthems like "911 Is A Joke" by Public Enemy's Flavor Flav and Grandmaster Flash & Melle Mel's "White Lines." Among the other songs on the set are Iggy Pop's "Success," Elvis Costello's "Watching The Detectives," and "Ball Of Confusion" by the Temptations.

Despite the abundance of recent cover albums, neither Capitol nor Duran Duran are fearful of a backlash. "I think the hard work we've put into each song will win out in the end," Taylor says.

Tom Corson, VP of marketing at Capitol, agrees. "The truth is also that a large portion of Duran Duran's audience has not heard a number of these songs. Something like [Velvet Underground's] 'Perfect Day,' for example, (Continued on page 18)

Don Dixon's Sweet Return On The Growing Sugar Hill

BY DAVID MENCONI

DURHAM, N.C.—There's nothing too unusual about an artist releasing an album on Sugar Hill Records, the renowned folk/bluegrass independent label, and promoting it by performing on the similarly styled "Mountain Stage" radio program. Except when the artist is pop/rock veteran Don Dixon, who makes his Sugar Hill debut March 29 with the album "Romantic Depressive."

The partnership is a stretch for both artist and label. Dixon is known best as a rock producer, most notably for R.E.M., the Smithereens, and his wife Marti Jones. Dixon's biggest success under his own name came with the quirky pop hit "Praying Mantis" in 1987.

Sugar Hill, meanwhile, has carved out its niche with rootsier music from acts like the Red Clay Ramblers and Doc Watson. However, the label has had recent success in the album alternative format with acts like Robert Earl Keen. Album alternative stations will figure prominently in Sugar Hill's promotion plans for Dixon, who represents a logical next step for the label.

"Even though it's rock-oriented music, what Don does is not incongruent with what we do in other genres," says Sugar Hill director of marketing Bev Paul. "We've been gradually broadening our horizons over the last three years. Robert Earl Keen and Townes Van Zandt, particularly, have opened some doors for us."

"Romantic Depressive" is Dixon's first album of new material since 1989's "EEE," which was released on now-defunct Enigma Records. The new album consists of songs written and recorded over a four-year period and is very much of a piece with Dixon's other records, mining a low-key pop/soul vein.

Highlights include "The Righteous Side Of Love," with a hook that's a dead ringer for the Searchers' classic "Needles And Pins"; the John Hiatt-esque piano ballad "I Should Know Better" (co-written with Red Clay

It May Sing Some Blue Notes, But Lowe's 'Impossible Bird' Takes Flight

LOWE LIFE: Nick Lowe is such a convivial raconteur that it seems downright wrong to even expect that he should do anything other than talk his way through life. But the fact remains that he's also a skilled singer/songwriter who has never gotten his due stateside, other than for a brief flirtation in 1979 when the infectious single "Cruel To Be Kind" reached No. 12. He is currently touring behind his new Upstart Records album, "The Impossible Bird," with opener Jim Lauderdale.

The album has been getting rave reviews not only for Lowe's undeniable pop craftsmanship and biting British wit, but also for its surprising emotional depth. The stripped-down style shows off Lowe's disquieting, weather-beaten vocals and Bill Kirchen's twangy guitar.

"It's lovely that people think this record is so grown up and bighearted, as it should be, since I'm 46 now," says Lowe, adding with a bitter-sweet chuckle, "The sort of depressing side of it is how trite and shallow people must have thought I was in the past, and they're so amazed that I can get anything out."

One of the most affecting tracks on the album is Lowe's "The Beast In Me," a song written for his former father-in-law, Johnny Cash. Cash's take on the song appears on his current "American Recordings" album.

"John's version is starker than mine," says Lowe. "Mine is more affectionate. I think of the beast in me as being something of a bumbling git, so I have a certain type of affection for the beast in me who makes me do these sort of horrible things, because it's really rather hopeless."

In addition to his own compositions, "The Impossible Bird" includes a cover of "True Love Travels On A Gravel Road," written by A.L. Owens and Dallas Frazier. Until fans told him, Lowe did not know Elvis Presley had recorded the song. "I went into Sam The Record Man's shop in Toronto and bought it, and it's really not very good," says Lowe. "Percy Sledge's version is a knockout, but Elvis must have been so famous then that no one would tell him, 'You haven't got that bit right.'" In fact, Lowe says if he had heard Presley's version first, he never would have recorded it.

Ray Price's "I'll Be There" closes the somewhat weebegone album on an upbeat note. Lowe rejects the notion that "The Impossible Bird" is depressing, "but it is a record about being blue," he admits. "It's not my sad story, you know. It's a record about what I think it feels like [to be blue]." In other words, although the songs may have been informed by some of Lowe's own experiences, to assume the album is autobiographical would be incorrect.

He says, "Picture, if you will, two people in a bar: one sitting there recounting in every detail the breakup of his relationship; the other sitting with a face sort of twisted into a rictus of sympathy, but with [his] mind wandering off elsewhere, toying with the glass, occasionally saying, 'Oh yeah.' If I'm making this record and I'm the one talking about the breakup of his thing, I don't see why I should inflict that on my lovely friends and my lovely fans. So I make up a character to write the tune, and if I don't interfere too much with the process and start trying to butt in with, 'Hey, just a minute, something like that happened to me once, too,' then the character stands a very good chance of coming up with something good and heartfelt."

Less plot development was involved when it came to penning the song that has provided Lowe with his big payday: "(What's So Funny 'Bout) Peace, Love And Understanding," a '70s hit for Elvis Costello, landed on the gazillion-selling soundtrack to "The Bodyguard" via a version by Curtis Stigers.

But just how many people does Lowe think bought the album because his song is on there? With complete authority, he answers, "I'm 110% sure that none did. I've had a lot of people come up at shows with my records to sign from all over the world, the most obscure things, and not one person has shoved a copy of 'The Bodyguard' under my nose and asked me to sign it."

But then, being a multi-multimillion-selling artist has never really been Lowe's style, which is one of the reasons he has no hard feelings about being dropped by Warner Bros. "I know what the score is. I know I'm a difficult act to market, Warner didn't hear my new album. The accountants just came in and said, 'Who's selling and who ain't? R.E.M., would you step this way. Mr. Lowe, would you please leave the building. Please have your desk cleared by three this afternoon.' But they were very decent. They gave me the masters... I think my days with the majors are finished because I don't want the same thing for myself as a major label, like international pop stardom. I'm not remotely interested in... that. In fact, if it ever looked like there was any danger [of that happening], I would take drastic steps to make sure that it didn't occur."

Radiohead Creeps Past Early Success Capitol Preps U.S. Radio For Dive Into 'The Bends'

BY BRETT ATWOOD

LOS ANGELES—Radiohead is ready to kill "Creep." The British modern rock act wants to prove that its 1993 breakthrough single was no fluke.

To that end, Capitol is exposing several tracks to radio in anticipation of the April 4 release of Radiohead's sophomore album, "The Bends."

In November, the label previewed the cut "My Iron Lung" on a commercial EP. The four-track disc, which was serviced to college and commercial, modern rock radio, also contains three new non-LP tracks.

"That was only meant to be a fan-based item," says Perry Watts-Russell, Capitol VP of A&R. "It wasn't a proper first single. We really didn't even pursue radio airplay for it."

In the U.S., the next commercial single will be "Fake Plastic Trees," which is due March 6. In the U.K., Parlophone will release "High And Dry" as the next single.

A 12-inch vinyl EP with two additional album tracks, "Planet Telex" and "Just," will be serviced on March 6 to some 650 college and commercial modern rock stations. Capitol also is servicing the four-track platter, which contains an extended mix of "Planet Telex," to dance clubs.

Radiohead plans to tour the U.K. and Canada in March, with a U.S. tour set to follow in April.

In the past few months, modern rock radio has warmed considerably to newer British acts like Oasis, Portishead, and the Stone Roses (Billboard, Jan. 28).

"The Bends" could benefit from this movement, says Clark Staub, Capitol's senior director of marketing.

However, KCXX Riverside, Calif., PD Chuck Summers does not think the current mood will translate into automatic airplay for the British quintet.

"I don't necessarily believe that a trend is even developing," says Summers. "Radiohead won't be able to ride on the coattails of radio success by other U.K. bands. If it's a strong record, it will do well. A sophomore album is always a challenge."

The Oxford, England-based act found U.S. acceptance in 1993 with its first single, "Creep." The song became the slacker anthem of the summer, reaching No. 2 on the Modern Rock Tracks chart.

However, its follow-up single, "Stop Whispering," failed to ignite much interest and stalled at No. 23 on the modern rock chart.

Some retailers say that Radiohead needs a strong lead single to avoid the sophomore slump.

"I'm a bit leery about ['The Bends'], but only because just one single broke from the last album," says Judy Neubauer, director of retail advertising and promotions for Simi Valley, Calif.-based Tempo, which has 30 stores in California and Hawaii. "If there isn't a song that equals the quality of 'Creep' on this album, it might not do that well."

Band manager Bryce Edge says that Radiohead is prepared to do whatever it takes to overcome the one-hit-wonder stigma.

"Unlike Oasis and many other overseas bands, Radiohead has never been championed in the U.K. press," says Edge, who manages the band with Chris Hufford. "Americans tend to be very critical if a band is shoved at them—particularly if they can't play live."

Last year, the British press published several reports that the U.K. act was on the verge of splitting up midway through its two-year tour.

"We probably toured for too long," says singer/guitarist Thom Yorke. "We weren't talking to each other anymore. We had been going for over two years on the strength of one song. I just didn't feel good about the state of the band."

Toward the end of that tour, Radiohead found itself playing some unorthodox places, including seven small venue dates in Mexico.

Zomba Blazes Multigenre Trail From Latin To Jazz

GENRE GROWTH: Traditionally R&B-oriented Zomba Music's hit-making process might be termed "genre development." The publisher has become successfully linked to song and artist/writer development that crosses genres, from pop, R&B, and country. And, as a result of a recent deal that brings the Mexican catalog of the Grevers to Zomba, Bob Grever will head the music publisher's new Latin music division, which already has brought a new Latin group, Los Filis, into the fold.

"The most visible success story is new Capitol/Metro Blue artist Andru Donalds," says VP/GM David Renzer Sr. Currently top 40 on the Hot 100 Singles chart, Donalds was developed by Zomba writer/producer Eric Foster White and signed to Capitol.

Renzer cites other "artist development" success stories such as Keith Murray, on Zomba sister label Jive and developed by Zomba writer/producer Erick Sermon; Horace Brown, an Uptown artist who was discovered by members of Jodeci; and Joe, signed to Mercury with the help of Zomba.

"While Zomba continues to successfully compete for the big ticket-priced signing in all genres of music—Breeders, Juliana Hatfield, the Grever catalog—the artist development success stories are exciting examples of publishers working closely with their writers to discover and help break new talent."

In the country field, Zomba is currently enjoying a No. 1 single by Tim McGraw, and Mike Hollandsworth has brought on a new act, Baker Meyers, which has signed a label deal to Curb/Atlantic under Mike Curb. Also, Zomba writer Gary Baker is a Grammy-nominated co-writer of the All-4-One hit, "I Swear."

Zomba's successful record in R&B was reinforced last year by its spot as the No. 1 Hot R&B Publishers. In pop singles, it ranked No. 4. The recognition of this high standing is reflected beyond the charts with a total of seven Grammy nominations.

PUB SAMPLERS: It's never dull on the publisher CD-sampler front these days. Newcomers include an unusual "Hurt So Bad" disc, a cooperative effort by the four publishers—Leeds Entertainment, MCA Music, Teddy Randazzo Music, and PolyGram Music—that own a portion of the rock'n'roll standard. The disc contains the three hit versions of the song performed by Little Anthony & the Imperials (1965), the Lettermen (1969), and Linda Ronstadt (1980). In addition, there are three special, newly recorded demos for R&B, a Spanish version ("Siento Morir"), and a contemporary jazz instrumental by Stefan Karlsson. The CD also features liner notes by Bobby Hart, who along with Teddy Randazzo and Bobby Weinstein are the co-authors of the song. Words & Music's copy arrived from Leeds Entertainment's Leeds Levy, along with four Band-Aids to protect, presumably, a hurtin' heart.

Another entry is a two-CD sampler, "The Songs Of Elton John & Bernie Taupin," that Alan Warner, an old hand at this sort of thing, has compiled for Warner/Chappell.

Warner has penned a brief paragraph on each of the 30 songs showing its chart history, both in the U.K. and the U.S. ... Finally, Chrysalis Music

VP of business affairs Jeff Brabec announces a compilation, "25 Years Of Chrysalis Music," which contains works by Paul Anka, Jethro Tull, Frankie Miller, Alvin Lee and Ten Years After, Blondie, Pat Benatar, Shaquille O'Neal, Paddy Maloney & the Chieftains, Billy Idol, Portishead, Tears For Fears, Domino, and Outcast.

A RHYME FOR JULE: ASCAP hosted a memorial tribute to the late composer Jule Styne at the Majestic Theatre in New York Feb. 9. One charming lyric offered didn't have a Styne tune—or any for that matter—but it had the words of Stephen Sondheim, who wrote the lyrics for Styne's "Gypsy" music: Jule/You never took things coolly/Your syntax was unduly/Unruly/But Jule/I love you truly.

FOLLOW-UPS: Nonesuch Records' second- and fourth-quarter releases this year will be continuations of its series of tributes to the great talents of Broadway and Hollywood. In the second quarter, the label expects to release another George & Ira Gershwin project, "Oh, Kay!," starring Dawn Upshaw. In the fourth quarter, cabaret/concert star Michael Feinstein pays tribute to writer Hugh Martin, and, in a follow-up to a big Nonesuch hit from last year, the label will issue "Gershwin Plays Gershwin: The Piano Rolls, Vol. 2," as assembled by producer Artis Wodehouse.

PRINT ON PRINT: The following are the best-selling folios from Music Sales:

1. Pink Floyd, "The Division Bell."
2. The Lemonheads, "The Best Of The Lemonheads."
3. Bob Dylan, "Bob Dylan's Greatest Hits."
4. Bob Geldof, "Loudmouth: The Best Of Bob Geldof & The Boomtown Rats."
5. Raffi, "Bananaphone."

Our Lady Peace Jumps Canadian Border Relativity Sows 'Starseed' At U.S. Radio, Retail

■ BY LARRY LeBLANC

TORONTO—Four months prior to the March 21 U.S. release of "Naveed," the debut album by Canadian alternative rockers Our Lady Peace, Relativity Records began seeking American radio and retail support.

On Dec. 6, Relativity serviced modern rock and album rock radio and selected retailers in the U.S. with a three-song cassette featuring two album tracks, "Starseed" and "Supersatellite," along with a cover of Neil Young's "The Needle And The Damage Done," from Sony Canada's Young tribute, "Borrowed Tunes." Last month, the label followed the initial mailing by sending out promotional postcards and fliers, as well as a promotional 7-inch vinyl version of the Neil Young song and a CD-single of "Starseed."

"This is a terrific band who've made a terrific record," says Paul Bibeau, rock product manager for Relativity Records in New York. "We're taking the time to set it up and get industry people talking about it."

"We've already got some stations, like [modern rock] KEDJ in Phoenix, carting up the cassette and playing 'Starseed,'" says Bibeau. Other modern rockers playing the song include WNNX Atlanta, WAAF Boston, KRQT Houston, and WBRU Providence, R.I., he says.

From a hospital bed in Calgary, Alberta, where he's been sidelined from touring by a slipped disc, the group's vocalist/lyricist Raine Maida says the band—whose other members are guitarist Mike Turner, bassist Chris Eacrett, and drummer Jeremy Taggart—looks forward to working in the U.S. marketplace.

will probably draw a different reaction from them than material with a more mainstream radio history."

Capitol will launch the album Feb. 27, when it begins to solicit airplay for "White Lines" from modern rock and top 40 rhythm/crossover stations and club DJs. The track will be the flipside of the set's first official top 40 single, "Perfect Day," which will be available in early April.

However, some top 40 programmers already have jumped on "White Lines"—thanks to a 12-inch U.K. pressing that was leaked to several stations. "We're pounding the heck out of it," says Garett Michaels, PD of WFLY Philadelphia. "We got that early copy of it, and it tested extremely well. Duran Duran has always been a great band for us. Once people hear there's something on the way, our phones start to light up."

Other components of Capitol's marketing plan for "Thank You" are in various stages of planning. Corson says a summer concert tour is being planned to run from July-September. Close to confirmation is a 30-minute MTV special that would include interview footage of the band, as well as interviews with artists whose material is covered on the album. Also in negotiation are in-store autograph sessions in Los Angeles and New York and a concert special with Disney television for the fall.

As Capitol puts its promotion and marketing pieces in place, Taylor is dividing his time between working on original material for the next Duran Duran album—which he says could be done by the end of 1995—and finishing a long-in-progress second album by his side project, the Power Station. He hopes to have the occasional band's album ready for release in the fall by Capitol.

"The Power Station album has that big, big sound, while the new Duran songs [are] taking us in a fresh direction," he says. "Doing 'Thank You' gave us a chance to look within and confirm our purpose, which is to constantly push forward—and that's what we're always going to do."

Music Publisher Tommy Valando Dies Of Stroke

■ BY IRV LICHMAN

NEW YORK—Tommy Valando, whose Valando Music emerged as one of the most impressive independent music publishing catalogs in the late 1940s, died Feb. 14 of pneumonia, followed by a stroke, at St. Mary's Hospital in West Palm Beach, Fla.

Valando, who was in his '70s, started his career in music publishing in the '40s with Joy Music, an important independent of the era. In 1946, in partnership with star crooner Perry Como, he started Laurel/Valando Music.

The dapper Valando found success with a number of individual song hits and as the publisher of emerging talents from the world of musical theater, including Stephen Sondheim, Rick Besoyan, Jerry Bock & Sheldon Harnick, John Kander & Fred Ebb, and Stephen Schwartz. Some of the show scores he published include: "Little Mary Sunshine" by Besoyan; "Fiorello!" and "Fiddler On The Roof" by Bock & Harnick; "Cabaret" by Kander & Ebb; "Company," "Follies," and "Sweeney Todd" by Sondheim; and "Godspell" by Schwartz.

Valando Music also spawned major music publishing executives, among them Jay Morgenstern, now executive VP of Warner/Chappell Music and CEO of Warner Music Publications, and Frank Military, senior VP in New York of Warner/Chappell.

In 1969, Valando sold his catalog holdings to communications giant Metromedia, becoming a major shareholder in the company. Moving to Metromedia's new publishing unit at the time were Morgenstern, who had joined Valando's operation in 1958, and Military, who joined the company in 1959. In the early '70s, Metromedia sold the catalog to a now defunct music-publishing unit of The New York Times, which, in turn, sold the catalog, among other acquisitions, to investors that included publishing mogul Freddie Bienstock.

In recent years, Valando operated the Valando Music Group, which incorporated ASCAP and BMI companies. He continued a relationship with Sondheim on such scores as "Sunday In The Park With George" and "Into The Woods;" the firm also published David Shire & Richard Maltby Jr.'s "Baby," among other scores. With Sondheim, Valando had a co-publishing deal. The company will continue under the aegis of his brother, Arthur Valando, in New York.

Valando was also a theatrical producer, having been involved in such productions as "Jerome Robbins' Broadway," and Neil Simon's "Lost In Yonkers."

Among Valando's charitable endeavors was support for such groups as Stop Cancer, Young Playwrights Festival, the Nicholas Institute Of Sports Medicine And Athletic Trauma.

In addition to his brother, Valando is survived by his wife, Elizabeth, and daughter, Patricia. Private funeral services will be held in New York.

DON DIXON'S SWEET RETURN

Rambler keyboardist and longtime Dixon cohort Bland Simpson); the slinky soul instrumental "Good Golly Svengali"; and the anti-draft commentary "Lottery Of Lives."

"The record has two sides. Side A is about the dysfunctional romance, with that same guy who sings all my songs singing about his lack of girlfriend," says Dixon, referring to himself in the third person. "Side B is more about things, rather than people—slightly more politically pointed stuff."

Even though it's been six years since Dixon's last record, he still has been busy. He remains an in-demand producer, having handled last year's "A Date With The Smithereens" and upcoming albums for James McMurtry (on Columbia) and ex-Guadalcanal Diary front man Murray Attaway (on DGC). He's even done advertising jingles for Busch and Sprint; session work with Mary Chapin Carpenter on the single and video for her No. 1 country hit "Shut Up And Kiss Me"; and a series of New York City performances of the musical "King Mackerel & The Blues Are Running."

In fact, it was a New York "King Mackerel" performance in October that led Dixon to sign with Sugar Hill. Label president Barry Poss met there with Dixon manager Harry Simmons, who later sent him a tape of the "Romantic Depressive" material. Poss expressed interest, and a deal was quickly struck.

"I was the last person in the world who thought Barry would like this record," Dixon says. "We hadn't even been thinking about Sugar Hill, but it makes sense. I like the integrity of what they do, and they seem in touch with the indie crowd that likes what I do. I don't think Hole fans will buy this album in droves. But fans of songwriters like Robert Earl Keen ought to understand it."

Dixon will record his "Mountain Stage" show April 1 in Greenville, S.C., with his touring band of percussionist Jim Brock and Spongetones guitarist Jamie Hoover. The segment will be broadcast sometime in May. Further tour plans were still being decided at press time.

"The extent [of touring] will obviously depend on the financial situation at any given moment," says Dixon. "I have some producing commitments I have to live up to because I still have to make a living, and touring at my level can be an incredible drain. But we'll be out there. The East Coast will see us a lot; the West Coast some."

MIAMI: In a lot of ways, the Goods are the ultimate local band. Upbeat, devoted, and loaded with great rock songs, it has been playing most clubs in South Florida and going through all the scene's ups and downs for six years. The band—keyboardist/vocalist John Camacho and brother Jim on bass, Kasmir Kujawa on drums, and Tony Oms on guitar—is pushing a new 12-song CD, "Mint," via a series of showcases and a release party at Miami's Hard Rock Cafe. The exposure has helped earn the album's first single, "I'm Not Average," the No. 1 slot on local rock station WSHE's "Top 10 At Ten." Picking the dozen songs for the CD—among the dozens written by the band—was the hardest part of the recording process, says John Camacho. "It's easy to write 'campfire songs,' but not a great song," he says. "Here we set out to write great universal pop songs to focus in on what we're really about. We all do some writing, but it has to have 'the Goods sound.' After being together six years, the bottom line in succeeding is working together well." The act has been working harder in the past year than ever before, and it seems to be paying off. After packing the local clubs for months, the band played a showcase at Nashville's Ace Of Clubs and in Orlando for the statewide Jammy Awards, where it was honored as best pop group. Its next showcase is planned for Tuesday (21) at Don Hill's in New York. Contact Tovar Management Group at 305-275-8242.

SANDRA SCHULMAN

TOLUCA LAKE, CALIF.: Hog creates commercial, alternative pop-punk that is infested with hooks, drive, energy, and Buddy Holly/Dick Dale speed riffs. This three-piece act combines the sounds of Green Day, the Clash, and a Kiss/Sex Pistols hybrid. Guitarist/vocalist Kirk Miller says, "This project stems from years of anger and rejection. We finally sold out... just joking. Everything just seemed to come together for us. The songs wrote themselves." The group's powerful song structure and memorable choruses are attracting major label A&R attention and drawing crowds to the hottest underground clubs in Los Angeles. The band has been together for six months and plans to release a six-song EP in March on its own label. Advance copies already have found their way into eager A&R hands. Ironically, during the day, Miller works for the company that delivers gold and platinum records to the labels. Contact Ross Schwartz at 310-284-7882.

JEFF BLUE

MILWAUKEE: Local singer/songwriter Peggy James has a lot going for her: emotive lyrics and melodies that work together in smartly crafted songs; a stunning voice operating in several emotional registers; and a new, self-released CD called "Crossroad Moment," produced by guitarist Mike Hoffman from the Milwaukee-based band Carnival Strippers. Like a big-city version of Iris DeMent, James is a country singer at heart who doesn't fit the current sound of Nashville. She's too eclectic. "I grew up with country & western—the whole flavor got into my blood. No matter what I do, it doesn't leave. Even when I'm doing a rock song, there's still that flavor there," she says. "Crossroad Moment" crosses the boundaries of country, pop, and rock and rubs elbows with the kind of heartland sound associated with the Jayhawks. Although James has seldom performed outside of Milwaukee, where she is a popular club attraction, she recently acquired a road-worthy band whose rhythm section formerly backed Brian Ritchie (Violent Femmes) on various solo projects. Contact James at 414-964-6580.

OUR LADY PEACE JUMPS CANADIAN BORDER

rather than with Epic or Columbia, who we were also talking to," he says. "We're the type of band that needs a smaller label and a long-term commitment. [Success] didn't happen for us overnight in Canada, so we figure it's not going happen that way in the States either."

Released in Canada last March, "Naveed"—a Middle Eastern name for a bearer of good news—has sold 46,000 units in Canada, according to Catherine McRae, manager, domestic marketing and artist development for Sony Music Entertainment (Canada).

The band's current Canadian single, "Supersatellite," released Jan. 10, is No. 40 on The Record's contemporary album radio chart for the week of Feb. 20.

"Within two albums, this band could be platinum [100,000 units] or double platinum in Canada," says McRae. "We initially thought the album would attract an 18-24 demographic, which it has, but we've also found tremendous interest from high school-level kids."

For the album's leadoff single here last February, Sony Canada chose "The Birdman," one of the set's least accessible tracks. "We deliberately chose a single which wasn't an immediate, commercial, hit-radio single and then serviced it specifically first to campus radio to build a street buzz on the band," says McRae.

"We knew 'Birdman' wouldn't do well at radio," says Maida. "What it did was allow us three months to tour with other bands and get better. Now we're all confident about our live show. We're not intimidated by playing with anybody."

Ten months of touring throughout Canada—including opening shows for Blind Melon and Canadian acts I Mother Earth, 54*40, and Pure—helped to develop the group's profile in Canada in the past year. But it was 12-week, heavy-rotation airplay of the George Vale-produced video of "Starseed" on MuchMusic, Canada's national video network, that gave the band its biggest boost. The track peaked at No. 18 on The Record's contemporary album radio chart.

"We're in debt to MuchMusic for exposing the band because radio was reluctant to play the band early on," says McRae.

Maida says extensive touring has been the cornerstone of the band's strategy from its beginning two years ago. "We didn't want to count on video or anything like that," he says. "Video ended up being good to us, but, at the same time, I'm not a big believer in video. Our philosophy early on was to play live and get people to come to the band that way."

Our Lady Peace hopes to employ the same heavy-tour strategy for the U.S. "We'd like to keep them out on the road for as long as possible," says Bibeau.

"The first show we did was in a really dirty club," says Yorke of the Mexican swing. "There were three tiny wooden tables that were used as a barricade. The only way off stage in the back was through a little window. We had just finished this large tour with James in Europe, and it was about as different an experience from that as humanly possible."

Yorke says mental fatigue and physical illness caused Radiohead to cancel its appearance at England's Reading Festival last year.

Illness is something that has plagued Yorke since childhood. "I was a sickly child," he says. "The content of my lyrics shows that I am almost obsessed with my health. If I get ill on tour, it really does something to me emotionally. I just can't go anywhere in that state."

Things began to change for the better when Radiohead finally settled down to prepare new material for the second album.

"We wanted to make this new record a year and a half ago—but the U.S. success of 'Creep' kept us from going into the studio," says bassist Colin Greenwood. "The delay added a seasoned street spirit that probably would not have been there if we had recorded it earlier. It's a lot more relaxed than our first record."

The title for the new album reflects the stress caused by the band's pain-filled, rapid rise to fame.

"I guess we just came up too fast," says Yorke.

Kendall Hayes Dies; Penned Country Hits

NASHVILLE—Kendall L. Hayes, writer of the top song in the history of Billboard's country charts, died Feb. 10 at his home in Danville, Ky., of liver cancer. He was 59.

Hayes was working as a bookkeeper in 1961 when country star Leroy Van Dyke scored with a version of the Hayes composition "Walk On By." The single went to No. 1 on Billboard's country charts, where it remained for 19 weeks, and to No. 5 on the pop chart. In its 100th anniversary issue, published in November 1994, Billboard proclaimed the single the No. 1 country charter of all time.

(Although "Walk On By" was by all measures Van Dyke's biggest record, the singer's signature song was his first hit, "Auctioneer," from 1957.)

According to the song's publisher, Lowery Music of Atlanta, "Walk On By" has been recorded "25 to 30" times. It has made Billboard's country charts four other times via singles by Donna Fargo, Asleep At The Wheel, Robert Gordon, and Perry LaPointe.

Other Hayes compositions were recorded by Johnny Wright, Hank Locklin, and Eddy Arnold.

A performer as well as a songwriter, Hayes toured in the Grand Ole Opry road shows in the '60s.

He is survived by his wife, two sons, and a brother.

leader whose influences run the gamut from Abba to Kraftwerk.

Those influences came together in the course of a year during which Ackerson had sworn off the band scene in favor of a full-time gig as producer for such local acts as Balloon Guy and Hovercraft (See story, page 104).

"I was determined to be creatively celibate," says Ackerson, whose previous band, the 27 Various, had released five albums (two on his own Susstones label, and three on Clean). "I was burned out and determined to take a break."

But creative forces, embodied by musicians John Strohm of Blake Babies/Antenna/Velo-Deluxe fame, Matt Wilson of Trip Shakespeare, and Matt Olson of Balloon Guy, forced Ackerson to change his tune.

"All these lovely collaborators came out of the woodwork and seduced me into getting back into the whole band thing," he says of Polara, which also includes Jason Orris and Jennifer Jurgens. "And all of a sudden I felt good about it. The vibe was really good."

The vibe captured on Polara's full-length debut melds Ackerson's primary '60s pop influences with sounds inspired by the early German synth bands Faust, Neu, and Kraftwerk, as well as English and Belgian house music (Billboard, Feb. 11).

A self-described "gear freak," Ackerson layered a plethora of guitar, drum, and keyboard sounds on the al-

John P. Kee & Choir 'Show Up' On Charts

Secular Promos Aid Gospel Success of Verity/Jive Artist

■ BY CARRIE BORZILLO

LOS ANGELES—Fueled by Verity/Jive's decidedly more secular approach, "Show Up!," John P. Kee's 11th album, debuted at No. 7 on the Heatseekers Album chart Feb. 11. It was the highest debut for a gospel album in the chart's three-year history.

The title reached No. 6 the following week on Heatseekers. This week, it stands at No. 14.

The album also debuted at No. 28 on the Top Contemporary Christian chart and hit No. 17 on the Top Gospel Albums chart in the Feb. 18 issue of Billboard.

"We went for a secular approach instead of a gospel approach," says James "Jazzy" Jordan, senior director of marketing for Verity and Jive. "We immediately bought time on BET and got [Kee] on the cover of secular magazines like BRE and [Jack The Rapper's Mellow Yellow]."

The label also took a cue from secular artist promotions, such as "win before you can buy it" giveaways, and used them at gospel radio stations.

On Feb. 18 and 25, the gospel television network INSP will broadcast Kee's upcoming concert home video, which will hit retail March 28.

JOHN P. KEE

"The biggest thing gospel music needs is exposure," says Jordan. "If we can provide it, then we're giving the world a balance in music. Gospel is filling in some void from less-than-great R&B artists."

Jordan also cites the success of newcomer Kirk Franklin (see story, page 5) and R&B radio's willingness to support gospel acts as factors in Kee's success.

Like Franklin, Kee also attracts a younger audience.

Kee describes his music as Sunday morning harmonies with hip-hop rhythms. "This has really infiltrated the secular industry," says Kee, an acknowledged former cocaine dealer and addict who now leads a 30-member choir that includes former gang members and drug users. "Even when you listen to the radio, there is so much of what we do there."

According to SoundScan, "Show Up!" has sold more than 19,000 copies to date.

Violet Brown, urban music buyer for the 350-store Warehouse Entertainment chain based in Torrance, Calif., says, "Each of John's albums are real strong for us. This one just happens to be a particularly great album."

Jaquie Haselrig, host of WGCI-FM Chicago's "The Music Of Love And Inspiration," says the songs "Show Up!" and "Made Up Mind" are getting a good response from listeners, but only time will tell if Kee has the crossover potential of Franklin.

"Kirk's album was out for a while, this one has just come out, so who knows?" says Haselrig.

FRANKLIN, FAMILY CROSS LINES WITH MULTICHART SUCCESS

(Billboard, Dec. 3, 1994), that has made him a star. The self-titled, debut album of his group, Kirk Franklin & the Family, released on Gospo-Centric/Sparrow in June 1993, is the most successful title from a new gospel act in years.

This week, the album moves from No. 10 to No. 8 on the Top R&B Albums chart and holds steady at No. 99 on the Billboard 200. The week of Feb. 18, Franklin became a Heatseekers Impact Artist when his album broke into the top half of The Billboard 200 by jumping 21 positions to No. 99. That same issue, it was No. 3 on the Top Gospel Albums chart.

The album debuted on the gospel chart on July 24, 1993, at No. 32 and reached the top of that chart on Dec. 11, 1993.

It then crossed over to the Top Contemporary Christian chart where it peaked at No. 18 on Feb. 19, 1994. The title also spent 31 weeks on the Heatseekers chart.

Gospo-Centric is making plans for a May release of Franklin's second album, "Whatcha Lookin' 4," which is said to be even more youth-oriented than the debut.

Franklin's February 1994 appearance on "The Arsenio Hall Show" was an important turning point in his career, says Vicki Mack Lataillade, president/CEO of the 2-year-old Gospo-Centric label.

According to Lataillade, the label never intended to cross Franklin over to the R&B market. "When he went on Arsenio is when it started," she says. "It did a whole lot for sales. Gospo-Centric is a youth-oriented label, and we want to provide alternative music for black youths. Our focus was to get a broad audience, but I had no idea [we'd be so successful]."

Lataillade says when R&B WGCI-FM Chicago added Franklin to its holiday concert in December 1994, album sales shot up dramatically. Suddenly, other R&B stations across the country began to notice Franklin.

Elroy Smith, PD at WGCI, says he actually got turned on to the song after learning that WOWI Norfolk, Va., had success with it.

"It helped bring WGCI and the black community closer [together]," says Smith. "This is a song that some knew prior to us playing it from their choirs. It's a song that really makes you feel good and touches your heart. Others make you snap your fingers, but the ones that touch your heart are the ones that become standards."

Once the word-of-mouth spread among R&B outlets about "Why We Sing," EMI Christian Music Group's new Chordant Distribution arm, which is the link to Cema for Sparrow and Gospo-Centric, began to market the album to the mainstream.

"We worked hard with the Cema urban reps to have the record set up at retail as the R&B radio airplay was hitting," says Hugh Robertson, VP of sales and marketing for Chordant. "Phase one of the plan was placing an ad in Billboard's R&B Airplay Monitor. We went from three stations to about 50 in a few weeks. Then we serviced it to 299 stations and did mailings and flyers."

Phase two of the mainstream marketing plan began after Christmas, when more trade advertisements were placed; the independent promotion firm, Coast II Coast Marketing, was hired in January.

"This is a phenomenon that hasn't happened since 'Oh Happy Days' by the Edwin Hawkins Singers," says Alan Lott, co-owner of Los Angeles-based Coast II Coast.

If the single continues to pick up airplay at R&B radio, Coast II Coast may attempt to cross "Why We Sing" even further to top 40 radio.

Keith Solis, music director of R&B-formatted KJMZ Dallas, says the song—the first gospel cut the station has ever played—got immediate reaction when the station first aired it. "It's because there's so much crap out there," says Solis. "People need a change from killing and rape. This song has something they want to hear."

Violet Brown, urban music buyer for the 350-store Warehouse Entertainment chain based in Torrance, Calif., says word-of-mouth helped build Franklin. Due to the rise in interest in gospel music, Brown says, Franklin "sells as well as any secular act."

Franklin says he's thrilled that he can reach a young audience.

"There's not too many young black guys my age doing gospel," says Franklin, who is also the Quaker Oats spokesman and winner of two Dove and two Stellar awards. "A lot of these kids don't have role models, and it's good for the kids that walk around with baggy pants and bandanas to see a young brother doing [gospel music]."

Adds Lataillade: "I've never seen a gospel artist get his clothes ripped off him at a show. It's his magnetism. People just seem to be very excited about this young man talking about the Lord."

She says his R&B appeal may have more to do with his style and youth than with his music. "His music is straight up gospel. If there's an R&B flavor, it's him. He's young, and his presentation is young."

Robertson agrees. "He's a young, hip-looking guy who wears cool clothes that transcend gospel and hip-hop," he says.

Franklin has been performing on weekends consistently since the album's release and is scheduled to perform at gospel music festivals this summer at all seven Six Flags theme parks. The series begin May 6 in Valencia, Calif.

Priority Enters Film Biz With 'Friday' Movie, Soundtracks

■ BY J.R. REYNOLDS

LOS ANGELES—Priority Records hopes it will have a good "Friday" at retail, with two albums set for release in conjunction with the comedy film of the same name, starring Ice Cube.

The first album, the "Friday" soundtrack, which includes new cuts from such rap heavy-hitters as Cube, Dr. Dre, Cypress Hill, Scarface, 2 Live Crew, and Tha Alkaholiks, is due April 11.

The album also includes new tracks from the Isley Brothers, Bootsie Collins, and Bernie Worrell, as well as old-school favorites by Rick James, Zapp, and Rose Royce.

To further tap into the growing nostalgia for classic R&B, the label will release a second album, tentatively titled "Old School Friday: More Music From The Motion Picture," May 9.

"Friday" marks Priority's first foray into the movie business through its newly established subsidiary, Priority Films, which produced the film in association with Ice Cube's Ghetto Bird Productions. The film is the first feature-length production from Ghetto Bird.

A company spokesman says Priority Films will continue to pursue feature-film ventures.

Priority Records president Bryan Turner serves as the film's executive producer, and its script was written by Cube and DJ Pooh.

Turner says the success of the individual artists on "Friday" will make the album a sales winner.

The soundtrack was produced by Cube, his manager Pat Charbonnet, and Priority executive director of business and legal affairs Andrew Shack.

"The easiest part was figuring out which artists to use on the album," says Shack. "The hardest part was the logistics of putting the project together and getting the artists to record the kind of music we wanted."

Logistics proved challenging because other than Cube and new Priority signing Mack 10 E-A-Ski, all the other artists who appear on the albums are signed to other labels, and scheduling recording time was difficult.

Although the album is stickered, neither the film nor the album are "gangsta" projects.

"The film is a comedy about a day in the life of Craig Jones (played by Cube), an average South Central L.A. homeboy," Turner says. "The soundtrack is a musical reflection of what's going on in the film."

Although the film is set in the '90s, Shack says the soundtrack has a "funky old-school feel. The contemporary artists on the soundtrack drew from the old artists of the past on this album."

The film's producers used old-school-styled "working" tracks during production. "Because the [working] tracks were so close to what we wanted, we ended up asking those artists to record on the project," says Turner.

To kick off the project, Priority is releasing the first single, Dr. Dre's "Keep Their Head Ringin'," March 7. "We'll be going out with promo CDs, vinyl, and cassettes to street teams, club pools, and mix shows the week before we drop the single," says Turner. "When we service 'Keep Their Head Ringin',' it will go first to R&B, then immediately to crossover stations."

The video for the single features images of Dre along with snippets from the film. Priority initially will service The Box, BET, and local video programs. MTV will be serviced after public awareness of the project is increased.

BET MD Gregg Diggs says music videos featuring snippets from a film can be a two-edged sword. "It can initially help promote awareness of the single," he says, "but what happens is it decreases the video's lifetime, because of the film's mass exposure."

Diggs adds labels often service another clip without the film snippets to maintain airplay.

To promote the album, Priority plans to conduct movie-ticket and album giveaways and other tie-ins with major-market radio stations. It also will conduct advertising campaigns and co-op buys with stations.

Special movie screenings of "Friday" will be offered to independent retailers to build core community awareness. The label plans in-store co-op campaigns throughout April and May.

Priority also is planning a press party prior to the film's release, to be held on a soundstage that features re-

HEARTFELT DEBUT: Canadian singer/pianist Diana Krall made her U.S. debut on Valentine's Day with "Only Trust Your Heart," released on GRP Records.

While hardcore jazz enthusiasts know Krall from her debut, "Stepping Out," released on Canada's Justin Time Records in 1993, GRP is aiming its sights even higher and going for a broader audience domesti-

"Only Trust Your Heart," which was produced by GRP president Tommy LiPuma (George Benson, Natalie Cole), has earned praise in such publications as The Hartford (Conn.) Courant, Jazz Times, and CD Review.

The 29-year-old Nanaimo, British Columbia, native also has appeared on CNBC, and her video for the R&B classic by Louis Jordan, "Is You Is Or Is You Ain't My Baby," is airing on BET's "Jazz Central" show.

On Feb. 7, Krall embarked on a tour that will last throughout most of 1995, including two shows during the NARM Convention in San Diego on Feb. 24-25. She's also visiting jazz radio stations and retail outlets during the tour.

ALTERNATIVE PUSH: "Music For The Jilted Generation," the second album from English techno/dance/pop act the Prodigy, will make its way to the U.S. when Mute/XL Recordings releases it here Feb. 28.

The album was originally released in the U.K. in July 1994 and has been certified platinum overseas.

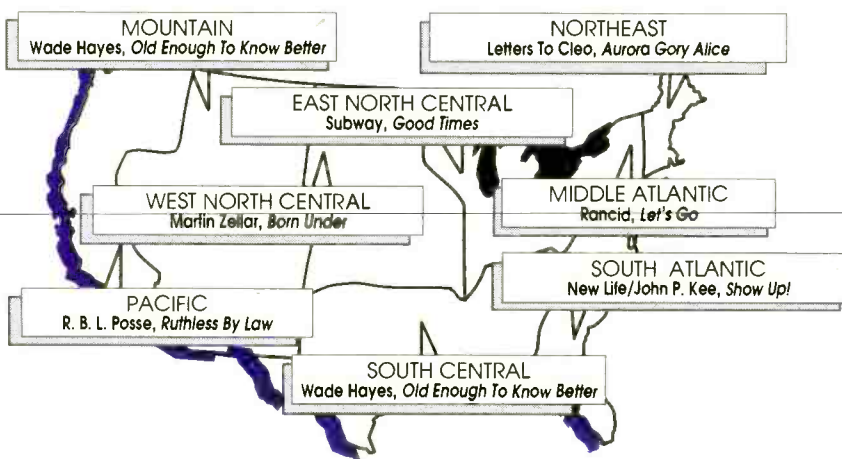

Mute's plans for the group, led by 23-year-old Liam Howlett, is to bring it to alternative audiences for the first time.

"They have roots firmly planted in the rave and dance community," says Mark Foliadis, VP/GM of Mute, "but through all their touring and MTV play in Europe, it's a nat-

Mute is planning to bring the Prodigy to the U.S. to possibly open for a more alternative-leaning act or headline clubs on its own in early April.

Last week, Mute serviced the full album to college, modern rock, alternative-leaning top 40, and select top 40 and top 40/crossover radio stations. Also, a 12-inch featuring three mixes of "Poison" was sent to mix shows and clubs.

The label is planning to release "Poison," "Voodoo People," and "No Good (Start The Dance)" as singles, but radio will dictate the order in which the singles are released and the songs for which the label will make videoclips, says Foliadis.

In 1994, the Prodigy took home MTV Europe's best dance act award.

IRISH EYES: Irish singer/songwriter Mary Black makes her U.S. major-label debut March 21 with "Looking Back" on Curb/Atlantic, accompanied by a spring tour and a 60-minute TV special titled "The Music Of Ireland."

The special airs on TNN on St. Patrick's Day and features Black performing a few songs with country great Emmylou Harris in "unplugged" style.

The album features 10 songs from four of her previous albums.

THEY'RE BACK: Philadelphia-based, acoustic-oriented rockers the Badlees have returned to its first label, Rite-Off Records, which will release the band's latest effort, "River Songs," on Feb. 28.

"Angeline Is Coming

Shocking Lyrics Earn '90s R&B Monstrous Popularity, Backlash

Throughout February, Billboard is commemorating Black History Month with a series of articles on the evolution of black songwriting in America. This fourth installment covers the '90s.

BY J.R. REYNOLDS

LOS ANGELES—In the early '90s, R&B lyrics written for shock value became more commonplace, and hip-hop acts like N.W.A. and 2 Live Crew cursed their way to platinum certification with albums like "Efil4zaggin" and "Banned In The U.S.A.," respectively.

D-KNOWLEDGE

But obscenities uttered by bad-boy rap acts led to a national backlash among concerned parents and politicians, who submitted censorship legislation.

Feeling the pressure, many mainstream music retailers refused to carry releases with lyrics-warning stickers.

Qwest/Warner Bros. spoken-word artist D-Knowledge says, "It's easy to write about sexual or violent impulses. But it's more difficult to write about emotions and things that trigger them, and artists today are going the simple route."

D-Knowledge's debut album, "All That And A Bag Of Words," was released Feb. 14. The artist, who is working on a doctorate in sociology at UCLA, says gangsta rappers discuss reality but only on a basic level.

"It's what you do with [the discussion] that counts," he says. "I discuss a lot of the same things they do but use methods and instruments that make a person dig deep into themselves for answers to why certain things are happening."

Another byproduct of hardcore themes was the formation of grass-root hip-hop groups that wrote lyrics counter to the more popular violent and misogynistic raps.

Arrested Development's "3 Years, 5 Months & 2 Days In The Life Of..." was released by Chrysalis in 1992, followed in 1993 by Digable Planets' "Reachin' (A New Refutation Of Time And Space)." Both groups fused hip-hop with jazzy instrumentals and delivered rhymes that reflected positive social themes.

Though both acts received critical acclaim, their commercial appeal was short-lived.

While "3 Years..." spent 73 weeks on the Top R&B Albums chart, peaking at No. 3, the act's latest album, "Zingalamaduni," spent just 10 weeks on the chart and peaked at No. 20, where it debuted.

Digable's Pendulum debut "Reachin'..." spent 32 weeks on the Top R&B Albums chart, peaking at No.

5; its latest album, "Blowout Comb," stayed 13 weeks on the chart, peaking at No. 13.

In 1993, the appeal of explicit lyrics among young record-buyers appeared to explode when former N.W.A. member Dr. Dre made his solo debut on Death Row with "The Chronic."

Saucy lyrics, combined with a new, slow-cool form of hip-hop called g-funk, propelled the album to No. 1 on The Billboard 200 and the Top R&B Albums chart.

As hip-hop eased its traditionally uptempo pace, it became even easier for young R&B artists to incorporate hip-hop into their music.

In 1993, Capitol R&B recording act D.R.S. recorded the gang-banger funeral anthem "Gangsta Lean," which was No. 1 on the Hot R&B Singles chart for six weeks.

On the sexually explicit side, such R&B acts as Luke's H-Town and Keia/Elektra act Silk experienced similar No. 1 chart success with singles such as "Knockin' Da Boots" and "Freak Me," respectively.

"Ridiculous" is how James Jackson, VP of publishing/GM for Motown Music, describes blatantly sexual songs. "I don't gravitate to them too much because they aren't exactly creative."

MOORE

"When Silk came with 'Freak Me,' I thought it was a novelty and cute, but there are so many groups [whose] whole thing is 'how raunchy can I be?'"

"The mark of good songwriting is being able to use [tools like] metaphors to hint at sexuality, to be provocative but not shocking."

While the promiscuous side of R&B grew, more conservative R&B artists continued to draw their share of listeners.

Silas/MCA artist Chante Moore—whose debut album "Precious" was certified gold and peaked at No. 20 on the Top R&B Albums chart in 1992—specializes in metaphoric themes relating to love and relationships.

Moore says she doesn't write in-your-face sexual lyrics because of her attitude toward relationships.

"Some people like it when you're straightforward, but I tend to take a more romantic approach to [making] love," she says.

Her current album, "A Love Supreme," peaked at No. 11 on the Top R&B Albums chart.

The lyricist/vocalist dismisses the theory that explicit lyrics are a generational phenomena.

"I'm still pretty young myself and know plenty of men and women who prefer listening to less suggestive songs," she says.

Midway through the decade,

R&B seems to be moving toward less hurtful or provocative lyrics.

"Listen to Mary J. Blige's record," says Motown's Jackson. "She sends messages like she just wants to be happy and to fill your life with God."

"Even Biggie Smalls, who rhymes about sex, money, and murder, says things like, keep ya gun in its place; don't shoot up the place; 'cause I want to get with that girl! It's about being happy these days because things in our society are just too dismal."

Pebbles' Mature 'Heart' MCA Preps An Adult Slant

BY J.R. REYNOLDS

LOS ANGELES—For her third MCA album, vocalist Pebbles wanted to reflect her growing maturity—both vocally and as a woman. She also wanted a less single-driven project that would stand on its own as a complete work of art.

The result is "Straight From My Heart," due April 25.

The set's 12 ballads and midtempo tracks have meatier musical and lyrical textures than her 1988 hits "Girlfriend" and "Mercedes Boy" and 1990's "Giving You The Benefit," which went to No. 1 on the Hot R&B Singles chart.

Pebbles says, "That's not me anymore. This album is about warmth and intimacy. And to do that, we took away a lot of the loudness that was present on my earlier projects."

Pebbles used a less-is-more approach to make "Straight From The Heart." She says, "It started with the melodies and the beats, then we worked on getting just the right moods."

PEBBLES

That done, Pebbles and the album's other producers—including Sean "Puffy" Combs, Tony Rich, Alex Richbourg, Organized Noize, and Kyle West—avoided much of the electronically enhanced highs and other effects that coated previous records.

"The keys of the songs are a lot lower," she says. "I'm right where I need to be [register-wise], so my vocals (Continued on next page)

Sire's Seal Influenced By R&B Greats; Kashif Offers Tips On Music Biz Survival

LYRICS ARE WHAT makes ZTT/Sire/Warner Bros. vocalist Seal one of today's most intriguing artists, and many of the British performer's influences come from American R&B.

"I listen to lots of Al Green, Stevie Wonder, and Joni Mitchell," says Seal. "Marvin Gaye was my hero. I love the way he seduced you into sharing his beliefs, and I'm sort of the same way."

"I hate lyrics that try to ram views down your throat. I think music should be about sharing your opinion."

Seal, who sings in the same register as Gaye, cites the late artist's "I Want You" as one of his favorite albums.

"His delivery makes you believe the content of his lyrics. Even if it's a cheesy line, the way he delivers it makes you believe he's sincere," he says.

Seal's current self-titled, platinum-certified platter combines soulful pop sounds with lyrics that address a plentitude of life experiences. He deals with popular issues such as love, honor, and respect.

Seal also confronts the concept of death.

In "Prayer For The Dying," the artist explores his feelings regarding death, seeking to comfort those who, for whatever reasons, are now facing it.

"It's meant to be an offering of hope. When I wrote it, I asked myself, 'what is it I could say to make myself and other people feel better.' I tried to show compassion for the pain and uncertainty associated with death."

Seal says American radio's format system stifles opportunities for black artists to reach broader audiences. He feels fortunate to receive top 40 airplay but would also like to be heard on R&B stations.

Says Seal, "Because [American] radio has the attitude that [fragmenting audiences] is how they gain listeners, it keeps black acts pigeon-holed."

BOOK CORNER: Producer/artist/author Kashif's "Everything You Better Know About The Record Industry" is a penetrating look at the ins and outs of the recording business.

Released through Brooklyn Boy Books, it offers more than simple, sweeping generalizations about the business; it is a practical, insightful view of the industry.

The 350-page book is available via the author's Los Angeles-based Recording Industry Information Service (RIIS). Not only is this book a must read for record business freshmen, its comprehensive scope allows even music veterans to gain a broader understanding of the biz.

Another upcoming volume of interest is "Race To Survive," the autobiography of blues artist Etta James, which is due from Random House in May. The book was written with the assistance of music author David Ritz, who is currently working on the autobiography of Aretha Franklin.

Elsewhere, journalist Rita Elizabeth Henderson, who wrote "The Boyz II Men Success Story: Defying The Odds," and the book's publisher, Aynderson Press, have been sued for unspecified damages by the Motown group for breach of contract.

The suit states that Henderson created her own literary agency after the original agency resigned and hired her own company to represent the project—without the approval of Boyz II Men, whose career is recounted in it.

ESSENCE MUSIC FEST: Essence magazine is celebrating its 25th anniversary with a three-day music festival July 1-3 at the New Orleans Superdome.

Artists scheduled to perform include B.B. King, Luther Vandross, Boyz II Men, Anita Baker, Maze featuring Frankie Beverly, Patti LaBelle, Barry White, Gladys Knight, Earth, Wind & Fire, Mary J. Blige, Aaliyah, Johnny Gill, Bobby Blue Bland, Ramsey Lewis, Dianne Reeves, Denise LaSalle, Cassandra Wilson, Ruth Brown, and the Ohio Players.

Queen Latifah and comedians Bill Cosby and Sinbad will host the show.

In addition to concert performances, the 120,000 people expected to attend will be offered empowerment and enrichment seminars, which also will be held at the dome.

The Essence Music Festival is a joint venture by Essence Communications and concert promoter George Wein and Festival Productions.

MCA PREPS AN ADULT SLANT FOR PEBBLES' MATURE 'HEART'

turned out more naturally. I like my voice raw."

Equally important is the lyrical content, says Pebbles, who wrote or co-wrote six songs.

"I wanted to make sure the right song was matched with the right lyricist," she says. "I picked folks who could come with the sound and moodiness that represented where I am currently in my life."

At various points on the album, there are interludes of ambient chatter at the imaginary "Club Laid Back," which give the album a nightclub-like tone and pay tribute to her early career roots as a club artist.

The adult-slanted "Straight From My Heart" poses a risk for Pebbles since it was the uptempo tracks on her self-titled 1988 debut and 1990 follow-up, "Always," that propelled the albums to No. 5 and No. 12, respectively, on the Top R&B Albums chart.

However, as Pebbles has grown—she's 30, married, owns Savvy Records and her own artist management company—so have her fans.

MCA senior VP of artist development Glen Lajeski says, "The album's target market is 25-plus, but young people can relate to her songs because they deal with love, relationships, and life.

"Fans expect her to still be 'Mercedes Boy,' but her voice has matured, and they'll be pleasantly surprised."

The midtempo first single, "Like The Last Time," sets the mood of the album; it is scheduled for release March 30.

Though the single is adult-oriented, it features hip, contemporary beats that may win over younger fans. To hedge bets, youth-oriented remixes will be produced for clubs.

While the label would like to gain young fans, it does not plan to forfeit the album's mature intent.

Lajeski says, "Our biggest challenge is letting people know that this isn't a dance record. To accomplish that, we're going for massive initial video- and air-play of the single."

R&B/mainstream radio stations will be serviced first, followed by crossover outlets. Then top 40/mainstream, followed by AC and other adult formats, will be approached.

Early in the campaign, Pebbles will be featured in fashion spreads in consumer publications such as Elle, Glamour, Essence, and Vanity Fair. Advertising in those magazines will come later.

The label also will approach business publications to take advantage of Pebbles' many business-related endeavors.

"Advance mailers have already gone out, and we'll soon be sending out promotion cassettes with selected tracks," says Lajeski.

The label plans to service the video prior to the single. Appropriate local programs will be targeted, along with BET and VH1, followed by MTV.

N.Y. Hits Home With Crop Of New House Indies

INTO THE GROOVE: New York's Nervous Records throws its street muscle behind the gospel-like house energy of promising new Miami act M-Five, who make an excellent first impression with "Lift Me Up." Featuring an impassioned performance by newcomer Brad Raker, the track contrasts a raw, soulful bassline with zipping faux-rave synths and blippy sound effects that will trigger memories of "Feel What U Want" by Kristine W. Producer Josh Wink takes the track down a deeper groove path with a dub that tempers his usual keyboard experimentation with a beat that is easily accessible to most house formats. His ideas respectfully complement the original concept by Tracy McKenzie, Raker, and Mike Mucci, rather than wipe it from view—a refreshing change of postproduction pace and our single of the week.

Relatively young King Street Records subsidiary NiteGrooves quickly is advancing in its bid for a separate street image with the release of two way-hot, producer-driven EPs. The four-cut "Two Fisted Love" by Bill Coleman and Louie "Balo" Guzman smolders with the same kind of dark'n'trippy heat as its 1993 Whatever Girl hit ("You Need Some) Activator." Each cut merits close attention, though the wickedly infectious "Attitude" and "Nope Dope!" likely will break out as a key jam for DJs searching for hypnotic tools for peak-hour programs.

Al Mack holds up the other end of the NiteGrooves banner with "Trax Of Color," another four-cut EP that brightly illustrates his ability to wrap lush keyboard lines around skittish house beats. Though not as instantly memorable as "Two Fisted Love," this set takes welcome residence in both the brain and booty after a couple of spins. Spend most of your time with "Jazz In The Projects."

Another New York indie making quick inroads in a relatively short period of time is New Breed Records. Specializing in acid jazz (for lack of a better term), the label is home to the revered DJ Smash Hunter, who serves the children a lovely time with "Party Platter," an EP of wriggling funk rhythms that are peppered with hip-hop and jazz spices. "Say Ow" inspired crazy heinie action with its Shaft-like guitar rolls and throaty, male vocal whoops. "Gettin' Dizzy," with its horn-coated beats and fuzzy bassline, is a little more of a chill trip. It's delish.

Also strong on the New Breed tip is "Hustletron" by DJ Hall, who shades his funk beats with a soothing, ambient keyboard texture. Kinda spacy and ethereal, this EP seems designed to slowly heat up an evening or bring it to a meditative close. Either way, it jams wonderfully.

Ex-Rumourz singer Sara Parker steps solo on New York's Vestry Records with "My Love Is Deep," a contagious pop houser produced by Michael Rosenman and Ellen Parker. She brings a loose and playful vocal style to the track—a nice change of pace from the oh-so-serious chest pounders that normally crowd the dancefloor. Sturdy post-production by the increasingly visible Armand Van Helden gives the track a frenzied, trancelike vibe that has become typical of his work. This time, he seems to be haunted by the ghost of Giorgio Moroder's '70s-era work; listen closely and you will hear the influence. Lenny Bertold's mix is equally strong, and it makes better use of the actual song and vocal—which is always much appreciated.

by Larry Flick

Chicago's S.O.S. Records broadens its horizons beyond the humor-laden output of 20 Fingers to include the more sexy and seductive work of Amazing Manfred, who works up a respectable sweat on "Let Me Be Free." Strictly for the dubby at heart, this track relies heavily on a muscular bassline and percolating breaks, capped by the occasional sounds of men groaning in ecstasy and layered harmonizing of the cut's title. Five mixes are included, with the intention of drawing attention from pop-minded spinners and underground taste makers. With instrumental work as tightly structured as this, we would love to see what Amazing Manfred would do with a whole song.

COMPILATIONS 'R US: The flow of multi-act, dance-music collections never seems to slow down. Although the overall quality of most of them has greatly improved, imagination in concept and visual design is in short supply. Here are several sets that deserve to rise above the current crop circulating:

New York's long-running Maxi Records issues a reminder of its rich five-year history with "Maxi-Mum: Dancefloor Capacity," an album that places recent pop-friendly hits like "Fuk Dat" by Sagat alongside harder underground classics like "Move Your Waistline To The Bassline" by Deja Vu, and "Helpless," the first single to successfully herald the talents of production team Mood II Swing (actually, we have been wondering whatever happened to the track's gifted lead singer Silvano). This is essential for aficionados of the Big Apple's unique house sound.

By the by, Maxi begins shoring up material for its next album with "That Ain't Right," a sassy and soulful kicker by newcomer Judy Albanese. The double pack of remixes provides house heads with several solid versions, while also courting radio with a downtempo, jeep mix that is juicy enough to hang comfortably with hits by the hip-hop vixens of the moment.

Another New York indie, C&S Records, launches a promising series of moody electronic music collections with "Ambient Extractions," which offers a scholarly view of the often underplayed club genre by slotting cuts by such influential figures as David Sylvian ("Words With The Shaman") and Brian Eno ("In The Dark Trees") next to young turks like John Blackford ("Ending Of The Beginning") and Astralasia ("Genesis: The Spark Of Life"). This is easily one of the more compelling and durable ambient sets we have encountered in recent months—thanks to the variety of tones and textures represented, which range from dubby and psychedelic to ethereal and jazzy. Such a broad creative scope provides enough twists and motion to hold your attention for the disc's entire 60 minutes.

When it comes to compilations, few do it better than the smart folks at Los Angeles-based Moonshine Records. Not only do they keep filler tracks to a bare minimum, they also work overtime to continually mine fresh groove ground and establish trends. "The Trip-Hop Test" documents the experimentation of such acts as the Dust Brothers, Single Cell Orchestra, Skylab, and Tranquility Bass, all of which deftly are melding elements of hip-hop, acid jazz, ambient, and techno to exhilarating effect. The seeds of the sound were planted within the ever-fertile West Coast club scene and have been blossoming in the U.K. recently. The inclusion of musings by mainstream names like Paul Weller and Saint Etienne will help bring the curious to the fold, though the jams from the lesser-known acts ultimately will keep you coming back for more.

Also on tap from Moonshine is "Drum & Bass 3," which gives new fans of jungle music a primer to the sturdy catalog of the rightly revered U.K. indie label Suburban Base. The compilation serves as an intro to the newly formed Sub Base U.S.A. Records, which will be distributed by Moonshine here. DJ Hype beat-mixes 17 startling jams that include the highly notable and single-worthy "Alive & Kicking" by Red One, "Heavenly Body" by Dextrous, and "Feel The Magic" by Sophisticated Bad Boyz.

ON LINE: Rampant rumors of Ru-Paul's on-again, off-again deal with Tommy Boy Records finally are laid to rest with the official word that the two have amicably parted ways. No one is commenting for the record, though Ru's manager, Randy Barbato, notes that the drag-superstar now is assembling material for an as-yet-unsigned album, "Snatched For The Gods," with longtime collaborator Jimmy Harry, "Supermodel" producer Eric Kupper, and Uncanny Alliance's Brinsley Evans. We cannot imagine Ru being a free agent for more than a minute or so... New Jersey's venerable Smack Productions posse joins the competitive fray of independent record companies with Smack Music: The Label. Ever-vibrant belter Colonel Abrams and producer Paul Simpson christen the company with a pair of nifty movers, "So Proud" and "The Ding-Ding EP," respectively. In the planning stages are records by DJ Disciple, former Aly-us member Kaylin-X, and a duet by Abrams and Ultra Nate (which should be an inspired pairing of voices), all of which should start circulating sometime next month. Smack Music: The Label is based in Teaneck, N.J., and is fronted by director of promotion Steve DeParr... The U.K.-rooted Go Beat! Records continues to keep import-savvy punters well-fed with a steady stream of tasty treats. Two of its better singles at the moment are "Young Hearts" by Gloworm and "Oh! What A World" by Sister Bliss. The former continues along the pop-injected groove line of previous hits, while the latter swoops with trance-colored keyboards (concocted with the aid of the ever-fab Rollo) and a dishy vamping by Colette. Both singles come in double packs, overflowing with state-of-the-floor mixes that transcend regional borders. Eternal props to the label's A&R staff for working hard to create records that do not require major surgery in order to connect in different territories... Hi-NRG icon Jeanie Tracy is about to release her first album in nearly a decade. "It's My Time" will ship in May on Pulse-8 Records, after being preceded this month by a reissue of the title track, a 1994 underground hit, sporting new mixes by Serious Rope and Tin Tin Out. Concurrent with the album's release will be a duet with soul legend Bobby Womack on the tune "Mansworld," which will be geared toward bringing Tracy back into the mainstream pop overseas. This project is still up for grabs domestically. An early preview of the set hints at its accessibility to the U.S. market... Although we are more than ready for long-overdue new music by EastWest's Michael Watford, there is minor solace in the recent, freshly refurbished "Happy Man," which is lifted from his 1993 eponymous debut. Producer Charles Dockins and the folks at Unruly Productions deliver a batch of slinky mixes that complement both Watford's unique baritone voice and the song's infectious hook. 'T would be nice to see the label muster up some energy behind a radio push. Regardless, this solid single will keep us sated—but only for a few moments. Time to get that second album together, folks... Crafty German rave act U96 is back with a jaunty new disc, "Club Bizarre," which shows it successfully trying smoother keyboard sounds that complement the simple, but cute hooks anchoring each cut. The first single, "Love Religion," has already gone gold (250,000 copies) in Germany. We are still awaiting news of the album's lucky stateside label.

THE RAP COLUMN

"For the first time, [fans] are gonna see inside my whole . . . head," he says. "They're gonna see all sides of me: a cool side, a happy side . . . everything. My album is just entertainment. I wouldn't say my shit is New York; I wouldn't say it's West Coast. I'd just say it's Ol' Dirty."

BARKING DAWG: Ron Resnick, the former Sleeping Bag/Fresh exec who made a brief stop at Savage Records, is back in the indie-label game with a new name—P.M. Chance. His new record company, Sleepin' Dawg Records, will be distributed by In-A-Minute Records.

Sleeping Bag, which closed in 1991, was a cutting-edge hip-hop/dance label that featured such artists as Mantronix, EPMD, and Joyce Sims.

For the new venture, Chance plans to translate the same qualitative A&R and focused marketing strategies that made Sleeping Bag an '80s powerhouse.

The label's first release will be the Just-Ice album, "Kill The Rhythm (Like A Homicide)." Its tracks, produced by KRS-ONE, Prince Ice, Big Ed Moore, Mark V, and O.C. Rodriguez, build on new-school sensibilities while maintaining the steely toughness the artist is known for.

Sleepin' Dawg is also set to release in April a compilation album of newcomers. Scheduled for the set are Ant Dog, from Marin County near San Francisco, Mad Monkey from Manhattan, and Runaway Slaves from Baltimore. More artists will be announced later.

"Although I will certainly include viable artists from everywhere, the Big Apple will likely be the album's epicenter," Chance says.

Sleepin' Dawg also plans a long-player inspired by the Black Panther party of the '60s. The project is being spearheaded by Kool Moe Dee, who also has a role in the forthcoming Mario Van Peebles-directed "Panther."

Among others featured on the set are Chuck D, C.L. Smooth, Paris, KRS-ONE, Melle Mel, the Last Poets, and the Watts Prophets. Look for this long-player in May.

BREAKDOWN: Two catchy, radio-friendly hip-hop/ragga jams to get with are the Mike Nice-produced "Do What U Want" (Tommy Boy) by Blak Panta and "I Like" (Weeded) by Skeeta Ranx . . . Nexx Level Productions, which has produced tracks for Flatlinerz, MOP, and others, has expanded and started a label, Nexx Level Entertainment. The label's opening salvo is gravelly voiced Smoothe Da Hustler's gangsta-limpin "Hustlin'," backed with Da Punisher's urban-gothic jaunt "Run." Both cuts were produced by D/R Period.

Bluegrass Society Honors Krauss Cited For Best Set, Song, Female Vocals

BY EDWARD MORRIS

NASHVILLE—Alison Krauss was voted the big winner at the 21st annual convention and awards show of the Society For The Preservation Of Bluegrass Music Of America held here Feb. 2-5. The singer, fiddler, and producer won in the bluegrass album and song categories for her work with the Cox Family and in two female vocalist divisions.

Voting was conducted by the several hundred convention registrants. (At press time, attendance was still being tallied.)

Other multiple-award winners were the Cox Family, John Hartford, Charlie Waller, and the Del McCoury Band.

The complete list of categories and winners includes:

Entertainer of the year—Little Roy Lewis; SPBGMA Preservation Hall inductees—Red Allen, Hazel Dickens, John Hartford, Emmylou Harris.

Bluegrass album of the year—"I Know Who Holds Tomorrow," by Alison Krauss & the Cox Family (Rounder Records); song of the year—"I Know Who Holds Tomorrow," written by Ira Stanphill, performed by Alison Krauss & the Cox Family; bluegrass songwriter—Sidney Cox.

Contemporary female vocalist—Alison

Krauss; traditional female vocalist—Wilma Lee Cooper; overall female vocalist—Alison Krauss.

Country Folk Can't Cotton To Rednex Video Also, Label Growth Alters Fan Fair Show Schedule

MEMO TO THE CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION: As we understand it, the commission's duty is to curb flagrant abuse of America's oppressed minorities. Well, grab your briefcases—you're in for a litigious ride. It seems members of the Nashville community have gone into severe and righteous shock upon hearing about the release in the U.S. of a thoroughly abominable music video from Jive Records called "Cotton Eye Joe" (Billboard, Feb. 18).

Their distress does not arise from the song itself—which has been a revered element of country music since Roy Acuff was in knickers. Nor does their complaint center on the fact that the whole package—save the song—is of foreign origin and issued by a Swedish group hideously named Rednex. What really chafes them is the video's depiction of country folk as drooling, gap-toothed, tobacco-spitting, sister-grabbing cretins. You know, like "Hee Haw."

This is, of course, an outrage. Are we hillbillies less deserving of government protection than other despised groups? Have we not labored to erase such demeaning stereotypes?

Yes, we have. The country music industry has spent a fortune to project for us images of urbanity and hip wholesomeness. It has virtually deified Vince Gill for his possession of these qualities. It has hired bold graphic designers and flexible statisticians and receptionists who unflinchingly pronounce their terminal "g's."

After all these efforts, are we to accept being vilified within our own frontiers? We beg your intercession against these cultural interlopers. Who do they think they're dealing with? Canadians?

MAKING THE ROUNDS: The proliferation of labels has led Fan Fair to consolidate and lengthen some of its shows this year. Here's the tentative schedule: Monday, June 5, 7-10 p.m., bluegrass show; Tuesday, June 6, 10 a.m.-noon, Curb Records; June 6, 2:30-4:30 p.m., Mercury; June 6, 7-10 p.m., MCA and Decca; Wednesday, June 7, 10 a.m.-12:30 p.m., Liberty and Patriot; June 7, 2-4:30 p.m. Warner/Reprise and Asylum; June 7, 7-10 p.m., BNA and RCA; Thursday, June 8, 10 a.m.-12:30 p.m., Atlantic and Giant; June 8, 2:30-4:30 p.m., Arista; June 8, 7-10 p.m., Columbia and Epic; Friday, June 9, 10-11:30 a.m., Polydor; Saturday, June 10, 10 a.m.-6 p.m., the Grand Masters Fiddling Championship at Opryland, USA.

Several of Billy Joe Walker Jr.'s fellow pickers turned out for the guitarist's recent showcase at Nashville's 328 Performance Hall. Among the faces in the crowd were Liberty Records' Cleve Francis, Patriot Records' Bryan Austin, and Liberty Masters Series' Matt Rollings. Walker was celebrating the release of his Liberty Masters Series album, "Life Is Good" . . . Garth Fundis has left his post as VP of A&R at RCA Records, and Bruce Greenberg is out as Liberty's GM . . . The Songwriters Guild of America capped its "Building A Songwriting Career '95" activities Feb. 11 by presenting awards to the writers of the top five Billboard country singles of 1994 . . . Robert Vega and Diane Painter have joined Capricorn Records as production director and art director, respectively . . . Kevin Neal has been appointed to a vice presidency at Buddy Lee Attractions . . . Jack Purcell has moved up to the post of national promotion director at Warner/Reprise, Nashville.

Robin & Linda Williams note in their current newsletter (under the droll headline "Brush With Greatness") that they are almost in the running for three Grammys: Their song "The Other Side Of Town" is on the Seldom Scene's "Like We Used To Be" album, a bluegrass nominee. They sang harmony with Iris DeMent on her contemporary folk Grammy contender, "My Life." And they provided harmony as well for the title cut on Mary Chapin Carpenter's "Stones In The Road" album, which is up for record of the year and best country album.

MARK YOUR CALENDAR: The Music City News Country Songwriters Award will air live on TNN March 8 at 9 p.m., Eastern time. Mel Tillis and Linda Davis will co-host the two-hour special . . . The Nashville Songwriters Assn. International holds its "Navigating The Road To Songwriters Success," March 9-12 at various locations in Nashville . . . The Urban Music Conference is set for April 7 at the Regal Maxwell House Hotel in Nashville and April 8 at Middle Tennessee State University's recording industry department in Murfreesboro. Details are available from Thomas Cain at BMI's Nashville office.

SIGNINGS: Steve Kolander to International Management Services, Nashville, for management . . . Charlie Kelley to an artist deal with Sony-distributed Blue Eye Records.

Tin Pan South Songwriter Fest Debuts Amateur Song Contest

NASHVILLE—This year, the Tin Pan South Songwriter Festival, to be held in Nashville, April 17-22, will get a new feature—the "It All Begins With A Song" contest.

The festivities will be organized and conducted by the Nashville Songwriters Assn. International. American Airlines, Arby's, Loews Hotels, and Washburn Guitars will sponsor the contest jointly.

Open to anyone who does not derive his or her main income from songwriting, the competition will be judged by an as-yet-unnamed panel of music industry professionals. There is no entry fee.

The contest winner will receive two airline tickets to Nashville and accommodations for six nights at Loews Vanderbilt Plaza. Arby's will donate a three-hour songwriting lesson with a professional songwriter.

Second- and third-place winners each will earn a Washburn guitar.

Details on registering for the contest are available from Tin Pan South, P.O. Box 129002, Nashville, Tenn. 37212.

Veterans Overstreet And Ewing To Tour

NASHVILLE—The Bobby Roberts Co. here has packaged ace singer/songwriters Paul Overstreet and Skip Ewing for a spring and summer concert tour. Plans are for the two to appear by themselves for most dates; for others, they will travel with a common band.

Although both men have had major-label deals before—and a string of hits to go with them—neither is with a label at this time.

Steve Peck, who is booking the joint act, says he expects the tour will start in February and probably last for no more than six months.

"I don't think they ever worked together [like this] before," says company VP Stephanie Maynard, "but they've been writing some [songs] together."

Peck says he is targeting venues in the 1,000-seat range for the duo, whose concert will be between $10,000 and $15,000 per date.

As a recording act for RCA, Overstreet had such top 5 hits as

All entries must be postmarked by March 25. Winners will be notified April 3.

The first-place winner will perform at a Tin Pan South Club Date evening.

More than 300 professional pop, rock, country, and folk songwriters are slated to take part in this year's festival. On the eve of opening day, April 17, there will be the Legendary Songwriters Acoustic Concert at the Ryman Auditorium, followed the next day by the Tin Pan South Songwriters Golf Classic at the Hermitage Golf Course.

Songwriters Alex Harvey, John Hiatt, Kim Carnes, Lari White, and others will perform the evening of April 18 at 328 Performance Hall.

The four remaining evenings will be devoted to Club Nights performances at various Nashville nightclubs. Among the songwriters scheduled to perform are Jimmy Webb, Christopher Cross, Randy Bachman, Richard Leigh, Pat Alger, Peter McCann, Gary Burr, Steve Dorff, Dave Gibson, Julie Gold, and Jon Vezner.

EDWARD MORRIS

"Daddy's Come Around," "Seein' My Father In Me," "All The Fun," and "Richest Man On Earth." He was the BMI songwriter of the year for five consecutive years.

On MCA, Ewing scored top 10s with "I Don't Have Far To Fall," "Burnin' A Hole In My Heart," and "It's You Again." His songwriting credits include the Collin Raye hit "Love, Me" and Randy Travis' "If I Didn't Have You."

○ Albums with the greatest sales gains this week. ● Recording Industry Assn. Of America (RIAA) certification for sales of 500,000 units. ▲ RIAA certification for sales of 1 million units, with multimillion sellers indicated by a numeral following the symbol. *Asterisk indicates LP is available. Most tape prices, and CD prices for WEA and BMG labels, are suggested lists. Tape prices marked EQ, and all other CD prices, are equivalent prices, which are projected from wholesale prices. Greatest Gainer shows chart's largest unit increase. Pacesetter indicates biggest percentage growth. Heatseeker Impact shows artists removed from Heatseekers this week. HS indicates past or present Heatseeker title. © 1995, Billboard/BPI Communications, and SoundScan, Inc.

FIRST TIME OUT: Oklahoman Wade Hayes becomes the first debut artist of 1995 to reach No. 1 on Billboard's Hot Country Singles & Tracks. "Old Enough To Know Better" is one of three songs on the album of the same name, which is No. 1 on Heatseekers and was co-written by Hayes and veteran Nashville tunesmith Chick Rains. Two additional titles on the project were co-written by Rains, whose writing credits include Johnny Lee's "One In A Million" and "Down To My Last Broken Heart" by Janie Fricke. Columbia senior VP of promotion Debi Fleischer says this chart feat is especially gratifying because a new Columbia artist hasn't topped this chart since Mike Reid did it in 1991 with "Walk On Faith."

CROSS-COUNTRY: BNA's Doug Supernaw leads the Airpower pack this week with the Dennis Linde tune "What'll You Do About Me" (24-20). Both Randy Travis and the Forester Sisters have recorded the song. Label execs, responding to several radio stations concerned that the lyric describes violent or obsessive behavior, are making an alternative version available. Supernaw is joined in the Airpower circle by Vince Gill's "Which Bridge To Cross" (MCA) at No. 21. Gill turns in the required number of detections for Airpower status in just four chart weeks. Debbie Murray, MD at KIKK/KILT Houston, cites "Which Bridge," along with Clint Black's "Wherever You Go" (RCA) and George Strait's "You Can't Make A Heart Love Somebody" (MCA), among the most popular songs of the week. Both Strait and Black are among the headliners at this year's Houston Livestock Show And Rodeo.

PASS THE SALSA: Tim McGraw (Curb) takes Hot Shot Debut honors on Billboard's Hot Country Singles & Tracks with the spicy "Refried Dreams" at No. 57. Five other new releases make their initial appearance on our chart, including Epic's newcomer Ty Herndon with "What Mattered Most" at No. 62. Meanwhile, Mark Chesnutt's "Gonna Get A Life" (Decca) checks in at No. 68. Alison Krauss and her band Union Station debut at No. 70 with their cover of Keith Whitley's "When You Say Nothing At All." This track, which appears on BNA's Whitley tribute album and Krauss' new set, is the top request-getter at WIVK Knoxville, Tenn., says PD/MD Les Acree. Aaron Tippin debuts at No. 71 with "She Feels Like A Brand New Man Tonight" (RCA), and Mercury's new traditionalist Wesley Dennis rounds out the week's debuts at No. 72 with "I Don't Know (But I've Been Told)."

GRASS ROOTS: Alison Krauss takes the Hot Shot Debut trophy at No. 31 on the Top Country Albums chart with the aforementioned "Now That I've Found You" (Rounder). A steady seller for the label with several prior bluegrass and gospel projects, Krauss' talents have added to the recent success of Shenandoah's "Somewhere In The Vicinity Of The Heart" (Liberty). The new Krauss album contains some previously released material and several new songs. Mercury's Shania Twain also debuts on the album chart at No. 65 with "The Woman In Me" on the strength of the debut single, "Whose Bed Have Your Boots Been Under." Meanwhile, Garth Brooks' "The Hits" (Liberty) remains planted firmly atop Billboard's Top Country Albums, his ninth week at No. 1. The Greatest Gainer award goes to Tim McGraw's "Not A Moment Too Soon" (Curb), increasing in excess of 3,000 units (No. 2), while the Pacesetter award goes to BNA's Keith Whitley tribute, with a 50% sales gain (71-55).

Soho's India Puts Zest Back In Salsa

INDIA INKS NEW SALSA BLEND: Like her label mate Marc Anthony, Soho Latino's fast-rising songstress India brings a distinct soul/gospel flavor to salsa, a marketing term masquerading as a tired musical genre that is in dire need of a fresh, new slant.

Musical labels aside, India provides a hip vocal and musical bridge to young bicultural, urban Latinos eager to hear salsa blended with appealing and familiar Anglo grooves such as R&B and hip-hop. India's success in the Anglo dance market, combined with producer Sergio George's street sensibilities, allowed such a musical hybrid to emerge.

Moreover, this striking native New Yorker, whose muscular high-end voice

by John Lannert

recalls Angela Bofill, is the first woman to bring sassy self-confidence to the salsa table. At last, distaff salsa fans have a female idol whom male salsa fans admire. Unsurprisingly, her latest album "Dicen Que Soy" is a top 10 mainstay on the Billboard Latin 50. The eight-song set already has yielded two huge hits: the weepy "Nunca Voy A Olvidarte" and the fiery, stand-up-to-that-man testimonial "Ese Hombre," which undoubtedly will be her signature song.

But listening to India's studio work and watching her perform are two different things. India's riveting miniset during the six-act "Concierto Del Amor" revue Feb. 11 at Madison Square Garden was a volcanic audio-visual assault that sprung the delirious soldout crowd of 20,000 from its seats on several occasions.

To hear pulpit-shaking, gospel/soul intros wailed in Spanish with convincing authenticity served as powerful prologues to he-done-me-wrong narratives "Qué Ganas De No Verte Más" and "Ese Hombre." With dancer-cum-contortionist Willie Ninja slithering on the stage between her legs as she belted out "Qué Ganas," India affirmed to thousands of cheering Latinas in the house that role reversals are possible.

While India dominated the proceedings at "Concierto Del Amor," other acts on the lineup fared well, particularly headliner Tito Rojas, a smooth veteran from Puerto Rico whose crowd-pleasing set was cut short by time constraints. The longtime M.P. artist did manage, however, to get off a slinky version of his hit "Señora De Madrugada" before exiting.

Sony's salseros Luis Enrique, who is from Nicaragua, and Cuban-born Rey Ruiz each turned in entertaining shows, but neither drew excessive applause from a partisan Puerto Rican throng seemingly more interested in seeing homebred acts perform. By contrast, Rodven's trombonist Edgar Joel, with vocalist Anthony Colón, drew howls and applause from the audience when Joel and his trombonists fastened the Puerto Rican flag onto their instruments. The leadoff act, Manny Manuel, turned in a crowd-pleasing performance that marked the ex-lead vocalist of Los Sabrosos Del Merengue as a future star. The handsome P.R. native especially revved up the audience when he sang "Rey De Corazones," the galloping title track from his debut album, released last year on RMM's upstart Merengazo imprint.

The concert's promoter, Ralph Mercado, said after the show that the 4¼-hour event was one act too long. He was right. Still, the breaks during set changes were brief, and much of the crowd stayed after seeing India, who was fourth on the bill. After all, there were many free agents in the audience, and no one seemed to be in much of a hurry to leave.

MEXICO NOTAS: The Mexican peso crisis has prompted Warner Music Mexico to pare 25 employees from its ranks, with EMI Music Mexico letting go of five. So far, no other majors have cut staff. Earlier this month, Mexican labels hoisted their prices by 15%-25%, as the peso struggled to hover in the range of 5.3-5.5 pesos to the dollar. Despite the generally tranquil attitude of Mexican labels execs in recent weeks, there still seems to be an uneasy, calm-before-the-storm vibe in the air. Meanwhile, the Mexican government mulls pegging the peso to the dollar and creating a currency board to oversee the peso's performance... Check out the Boxscore section in the Feb. 18 issue of Billboard in which the Rolling Stones topped the listing by ringing up $11,784,755 in gross receipts for their four January shows at Hermanos Rodriguez Autodromo in Mexico City, which OCESA and BCL Group promoted. Records showing an increase in detections over the previous week, regardless of chart movement. A record which has been on the chart for more than 20 weeks will not receive a bullet, even if it registers an increase in detections. Airpower awarded to those records which attain 600 detections for the first time. If two records are tied in number of plays, the record being played on more stations is placed first. Records below the top 20 are removed from the chart after 26 weeks. © 1995 Billboard/BPI Communications, Inc.

Selena Reigns At Tejano Awards

BY RAMIRO BURR

SAN ANTONIO, Texas—Selena dominated the 15th annual Tejano Music Awards, winning six of 15 categories during a ceremony held here Feb. 11 at the Alamodome. The EMI Latin superstar was followed by label mate Emilio, who won three awards.

SELENA

Named female entertainer for the seventh consecutive year, Selena also won the album of the year, orchestra category, for the third straight year with her smash hit, "Amor Prohibido."

That record has been nominated for a Grammy in the best Mexican-American performance, which she won last year. Selena also collected hardware for female vocalist and record of the year ("Amor Prohibido") and Tejano crossover song ("Techno Cumbia"). The 23-year-old Lake Jackson, Texas, native shared the song of the year kudlos with Pete Astudillo. Selena's English-language album for SBK is due out in May.

Emilio—signed by Liberty Records in 1994—won male entertainer and male vocalist, as well as vocal duo for his performance with label mate Roberto Pulido on "Ya Ahora Es Tarde." The next day, Feb. 12, Emilio made his second consecutive appearance at the San Antonio Livestock Show, performing two soldout shows at Freeman Coliseum.

La Diferenzia, Arista-Texas'

Grammy nominee this year in the Mexican-American category, won most promising band. The three latest albums by Selena ("Amor Prohibido"), Emilio ("Soundlife"), and La Diferenzia ("La Diferenzia") appeared in the top 10 of the Billboard Latin 50 in the Feb. 18 issue.

More than two-dozen artists performed or presented trophies at the Tejano Music Awards, including Jay Perez, Emilio, Pulido, Stephanie Lynn & High Energy, Ruben Ramos, Gary Hobbs, Joe Jama, Pete Astudillo, Roel Martinez, Jorge Alejandro, La Diferenzia, Fandango USA, and Liberty Band.

The 1995 edition of the TMA marked the first time in three years that all the record labels participated in the awards. In April 1992, four labels—Sony Discos, Rodven, Freddie, and Fonovisa—pulled out, citing what they considered improprieties in the voting process.

However, none of the labels offered any hard evidence to support their allegations. By last fall, the labels returned to the event. Only Grammy winner Little Joe and Sony's flagship Tejano/pop act La Mafia still sat out the awards. The votes at this year's awards were compiled from random ballots sent to 50,000 Latino households in Texas.

The TMA capped a busy week of showcases and receptions spotlighting the Tejano music industry. On Feb. 10, the TMA Fanfair/Talent Showcase drew an estimated 20,000 fans to San Antonio's Market Square to see upstart acts, as well as receive free autographs, photographs, posters, and CD singles. Here is the complete list of winners:

Song of the year: "Bidi Bidi Bom Bom," Selena/Pete Astudillo.

Most promising band: La Diferenzia.

Male entertainer: Emilio.

Female entertainer: Selena.

Male vocalist: Emilio.

Female vocalist: Selena.

Vocal duo: Emilio and Roberto Pulido.

Album of the year, orchestra: "Amor Prohibido," Selena.

Album of the year, conjunto progressive: "Ya Me Cansé," David Lee Garza.

Album of the year, conjunto traditional: "Tres Ramitas," Hometown Boys.

also placed second, grossing $4,527,556 in three concerts at Pacaembu Stadium in São Paulo, Brazil, which BCL and Promoter Marketing produced. The average ticket price in Mexico City worked out to be just under a rather phat $58; the average ticket ducat in São Paulo was about $34.50 . . . Has country music arrived in Monterrey? A Mexican-glazed version appears to be attracting fans. The two biggest acts playing fiddle and steel guitar are Disa's Wild West and MCM's Caballo Dorado, both of which could easily slide into Nashville—if they sang in English. Execs from the majors, such as Lydia Salazar, label director of Warner Music Mexico's roots imprint Raza, are mulling the possibility of inking Mexican country artists. There also is a dance that goes along with this hybrid sound. Time to book these bands on "El Gran Viejo Opry."

MISCELLANEA: Despite the re-entry of all major labels into the Tejano Music Awards this year, perennial TMA power EMI Latin still won 10 of 15 awards . . . Speaking of Tejano, heralded country-music television program "Austin City Limits" airs "Tejano Music Special" Saturday (25). Appearing on the show is an all-Arista/Texas lineup featuring Freddy Fender, Flaco Jiménez, La Diferenzia, Joel Nava, and Rick Orozco. In January, Tribute Entertainment's "The Road" offered a fine segment on Tejano music that included commentary from both Tejano stars (Selena, Emilio, Fender), and country notables (Brooks & Dunn, Willie Nelson) . . . Latino rockers Gunhill Road, King Changó, Lotus, and Situación Zero are booked to perform Feb. 26 at SOB's in New York. This rare rock en español happening in Gotham is being promoted by a local organization of Latino rock aficionados called Rock De Los '90s.

CHART NOTES: Tropical stations WRYM-FM Hartford, Conn., and WRMQ-AM Orlando, Fla., have been dropped from the panel of reporting stations to Hot Latin Tracks. There now are 19 tropical/salsa stations and 113 total stations.

Bronco's "Qué No Me Olvide" (Fonovisa) tops the Hot Latin Tracks for the third straight week and now holds an astonishing 821-point lead over Selena's No. 2 entry, "Fotos Y Recuerdos."

SENIORS AT PLAY: It's not quite the Geritol Brigade, but Columbia's "Legendary Pioneers" are a tad older than the usual run of jazz artists coveted by major labels. After introducing the series in 1993 (with works from George Wein, Doc Cheatham, and Alvin Batiste), Columbia decided to give the seniors a rest—until now, with this latest batch of titles, from pianist-vocalist Valerie Capers, altoist Lou Donaldson, and bassist Milt Hinton.

Capers, whose "Come On Home" should offset the notion that she is vastly underrecorded, is one of jazz's special stories—the first sightless person to graduate from the Juilliard School Of Music (in the '50s), and now chairman of the City University Of New York's Bronx Community College.

Donaldson, of course, first made his name in the '50s and '60s as a soulful, swinging, hard-bop specialist. His Columbia debut, "Sentimental Journey," finds him winking in the direction of his chief inspiration and influence, Charlie Parker.

Hinton, at 84 the one jazz artist least likely to end up in God's waiting room playing shuffleboard (Miami, I think it's called), is experiencing a renaissance of sorts: two books of photography and a featured role in the Oscar-nominated documentary film "A Great Day In Harlem." His "Laughing At Life" is a long overdue reminder that the few guys remaining who were actually around during jazz's formative years probably have a story or two to tell.

FOLLOWING A LITERARY BEAT: Drummer Arthur Taylor, who died Feb. 6 at the age of 65, was a rarity in jazz: a musician keen on documenting the thoughts and comments of his confrères. While living an expatriate's life in Europe during the '60s and '70s (first in France and then Belgium), Taylor interviewed many musicians who passed his way (including Ornette Coleman, Max Roach, Randy Weston, and Dexter Gordon).

Their exchanges were collected in Taylor's celebrated "Notes And Tones" (Da Capo Press), a book that examined the far-from-home jazzmen's prevailing views on racism, music, drugs, life. Taylor, himself a complicated person who fronted a veneer of gentility while seemingly wrangling with a host of latent emotions, was bent on making a contribution that transcended the myriad recordings he had worked on. Those included John Coltrane's "Giant Steps," Miles Davis' "Miles Ahead," and Thelonious Monk's "Town Hall Concert."

Though he was a musician's musician whose drumming was truly recognized for its swingful, understated elegance (he had just finished a Verve recording with organist Jimmy Smith, slated for issue in June), his legacy likely will include his words as much as his music.

Trumpeter Art Farmer, a fellow expatriate who first worked with Taylor in the early '50s, offered this assessment of his late colleague: "It's one thing to talk about talking with jazz musicians, it's quite another to actually do it. Arthur had wonderful ears, which he used, whether he was playing on the bandstand or being a writer. He knew how to listen."

STUFF: Pianist Gonzalo Rubalcabo, one of the esteemed few to make it to this year's Grammy's nomination list (best jazz instrumental performance, for "Rhapsodia"), gets a guest shot bending the ivories the night of the telecast, March 1... Producer and Prestige Records founder Bob Weinstock, who made his first disc before some of us were born (1949), has returned to the studio (this time as executive producer) to capture the Milestone debut of drummer Duffy Jackson. For those unfamiliar with Jackson's work, he is the son of renowned bassist Chubby Jackson, who motored the big bands of Count Basie and Illinois Jacquet, and has earned the right to be considered a powerhouse.

CUT AND PRINT: It's hard to imagine who exactly will be the audience for the Gérard Corbiau film "Farinelli," but opera fans will certainly want to catch it, or at least its soundtrack on Auvidis' label Travelling (distributed by Harmonia Mundi). The picture is due for release in March and already has earned an Oscar nomination for best foreign film. (See Global Music Pulse, page 47.)

For this highly romanticized tale based on the life of castrato singer Farinelli (1705-1782), the filmmaker had to figure out how to create a castrato voice, given the fact that the traditional method for doing so is not legal in any state I know of. His solution was to use two singers, countertenor Derek Lee Ragin and soprano Ewa Malias Godlewska, to span Farinelli's 3½-octave vocal range, then digitally fuse and homogenize the tone quality of their voices in order to create a single voice. The result is a remarkable sound, combining male timbre and weight with female brilliance throughout the range.

The plot, which has Farinelli (Stéfano Dionisi) and his brother (Enrico Lo Verso) seducing women across the length of Europe in a unique one-two system, borders on the absurd, but the long stretches of Farinelli singing, with full 18th-century baroque opera costumes and scenery, and the subplot about his conflict with Handel (Jeroen Krabbé), should prove absorbing for fans of 18th-century opera—and maybe for some people who didn't know they were. According to Harmonia Mundi, the soundtrack sold 250,000 copies in Europe in six weeks, and Melvin Jahn, classical manager of Tower Records in Berkeley, Calif., has his sales campaign all ready with a catchy tag line: Music Minus Two.

LET'S EDUCATE: Here's a way to use some of that old video footage: repackage it as educational material. RCA Victor has started a new line, "Classic Encounters," which features Robert Winter, the lecturer and musicologist who scored a hit with Voyager's CD-ROM interactive classical music series. For the first three RCA videos, Winter, who is engaging and amusing, does a stand-up talk with piano about each piece for a studio audience, occasionally crosscutting to the videotaped performance.

He has particular fun with the teenaged Evgeny Kissin playing Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1. A full performance of the work follows each talk (the other two initial releases feature the "1812 Overture" and "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"). The videos are billed as "an introduction to classical music for children and adults"—well, even the diverting Mr. Winter is still basically doing musical analysis, so it's probably not the way to your 8-year-old's heart.

WHITHER PUBLIC RADIO: Attendees of the Music Personnel Conference in Nashville reported lots of discussion about the crisis in classical music and public radio's place in that. High on the agenda was a face-off between stations that stick to a pure "western classical music" format and those that cast their nets wider for music and introduce Indian ragas and other national music styles in hopes of attracting new listeners. No consensus, needless to say, on that score. But some anecdotal evidence—a woman who launched a station in Kentucky set out suggestion boxes and went from nothing but Pachelbel's "Canon" to requests for Shostakovich—suggests that folks out there are listening where you might least expect it.

Vid Show Offers Dance Music's Faces L.A.'s 'Groove TV' Spotlights Top DJs, Acts

BY DEBORAH RUSSELL

LOS ANGELES—A new music video show hopes to put a face on the dance genre by being personality driven. "Groove TV" debuted Feb. 4 via UHF outlet KMET L.A.

Hosted by radio personality Egil Aalvik (best known in radio circles as Swedish Eagle), the program is one of the only TV outlets to showcase the artistry of dance music's top DJs, including the hot French talent Laurent Garnier, rave-alternative DJ Keoki, artist/DJ/producer Moby, and the team of John Acquaviva & Richie Hawtin, among others.

"There are those who say dance music is faceless," says Swedish Eagle, who also serves as executive producer of the weekly, hourlong program. "The whole concept of this TV show is to put a face on it."

"Groove TV" reaches about 4.5 million L.A.-based households at midnight each Saturday. The show is designed as a visual complement to the radio personality's syndicated program "Groove Radio," which, for nearly three years, has mixed such dance subgenres as techno, house, trance, ambient, trip-hop, jungle, reggae, and dancehall music.

"This music needs an outlet so that the concepts of dance and its artists have a chance to grow," says Swedish Eagle, who hopes to expand the genre out of the club scene and onto the nation's airwaves.

The premiere episode of "Groove TV" featured clips by Jam & Spoon, D:Ream, Portishead, Jaydee, Deep Forest, Ini Kamoze, Bob Marley & the Wailers, M-People, and T99. The show likely will be a popular outlet for such rising dance labels as Moonshine Music, Tribal America, Antler Subway, and ffr. The latter already contributed clips by its artists Capella, M-Beat (featuring General Levy), and Orbital to the first installment of the show.

Video play on each show may run uninterrupted for three or four songs in order to maintain a consistent dance-party feeling, says Swedish Eagle.

An interview and performance by Moonshine Music's Keoki is featured in a forthcoming episode, and actress/singer Traeci Lords, who is launching her own dance-music career with the Radioactive Records video "Control," is scheduled to co-host in the future. (Lords has expressed her hopes to become a DJ, too.)

"Groove TV" is the latest undertaking by regional video producer Jon Faulkner. He also produces the alternative-clip show "Notes From The Underground," which airs on KMET and is syndicated to 20 cities by the station's parent Network One.

Faulkner and Swedish Eagle first met in the late '80s, when the radio personality, who then worked for alternative outlet KROQ L.A., hosted the now defunct "Request Video." Faulkner produced that show at the time.

When KMET's GM recently suggested to Faulkner that he find a new video show to fill an open time slot, the producer says he immediately thought of Swedish Eagle. Faulkner contacted the dance-music aficionado, and together they launched the program.

"It's really fun to do something new like this," says Faulkner. "There's not a whole lot of overlap in the industry."

Now that the show is in production,

Faulkner says he is seeking to establish cross-promotional ties with local club owners, independent retail outlets, and magazines.

Dance-music labels are encouraged by the promotional opportunities that may arise as a result of the new show, and some say they may step up production of shortform clips to further promote the music.

"The genre has been neglected by radio and TV for so long," says Stephanie Smiley, who handles media and artist relations for three-year-old Moonshine Music. Most recently, the label has explored electronic distribution of video via the Internet.

Smiley says Moonshine "definitely will start checking into making more videos" if shows such as "Groove TV" catch on.

For his part, Faulkner says he is confident that fans of dance music will catch on to "Groove TV" and will soon embrace its unique sensibilities.

"This music attracts a very cult-type audience," Faulkner says. "It's such a tight scene, and the people are so avid about the music. You don't see it on other outlets. We're really looking at some unexplored territory."

"Groove TV" is produced by Full Moon Productions in association with EAMC of Whittier, Calif.

'Jazz Alley' Moves Into Posh Digs Enhancing Production

JAZZED FOR THE FUTURE: Kenny Burgmaier of Denver's "Jazz Alley TV" reports he recently moved his production headquarters to a 20,000-square-foot studio in Arvada, Colo. The new facility includes a 400-seat theater, editing bay, and film-to-video transfer facility, which means the "Jazz Alley" crew now can produce live concerts on tape and film, and shoot and edit short- and long-form videos, all under one roof.

But the fancy new headquarters doesn't mean Burgmaier's restless crews will be spending a lot of time close to home. In fact, Burgmaier and company just returned from a "blues cruise" through the tropical waters around Grand Cayman, Jamaica, and the Bahamas. A special May installment of "Jazz Alley TV" will feature footage of live cruise-ship performances by Dr. John, Taj Mahal, Roomful Of Blues, Rod Piazza, and more, which Burgmaier says he hopes to package into a longform home video.

Jazz Alley also has produced longform videos for the Subdudes, the Radicators, David Amram, and Johnny "Guitar" Watson.

As if that weren't enough activity: This busy entrepreneur reports he also is developing a film about the life of Louis Armstrong. And he continues his efforts to raise financing for his proposed 24-hour Jazz & Blues Network.

REEL NEWS: Virgin's Lydia Sarno and Devin Sarno are set to helm the video production department at the new Work Group label, headed by Jordan Harris and Jeff Ayeroff. Amy Stanton is now senior director of video production at Virgin.

In production: New York's Automatic Productions recently opened its doors in Santa Monica, Calif. Tara Fitzpatrick represents the directors roster on the West Coast. The firm's directors include David Kleiler, Dan Winters, Jesse Peretz, Ernie Fritz, David Perez Shadi, Curtis Wehrfritz, Jeb Brien, Larry Jordan, and Chris Hafner. . . Michael Salomon has joined the directors roster at Picture Vision. He'll be based out of the firm's Nashville office . . . Georgia Archer is back in the executive producer's chair at L.A.-based Visages. Melissa Ruderman is now directors' representative at the company. The roster includes Daniela Federici, Sante D'Orazio, Kate Garner, Paul Archard, Davis Factor, Satoshi Saikusa, Paul Jasmin, Joseph Kahn, and Brian Russo. . . Director Jay Torres now is represented by North Hollywood-based Visual Artists . . . Keith Milton and Chelsea Pictures have moved to Hollywood Center Studios at 1040 N. Las Palmas, Bldg. 7, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

In network news: Gregg Ricca is executive VP, MTV Networks . . . Brian Diamond is senior VP, MTV Production . . . Lisa Berger is VP, talent development at MTV.

NETWORKING: The Austin Music Network's Kent Benjamin, who spoke on the "Niche Programming" panel at Billboard's 16th Annual Music Video Conference in November, reports AMN recently began airing programs by his fellow Billboard panelists. Austin-based viewers now can see Charlene Warner's "Tropical Beat" and Kenny Burgmaier's "Jazz Alley TV." AMN also has picked up Mike Drumm's "Music Link" show.

MORE BILLBOARD networking in action: Cyndi Lauper's new Epic video, "I'm Gonna Be Strong," is the latest production from Beth LaMure's L.A.-based Daisy Force Pictures. LaMure linked with Lauper following Billboard's 15th Annual Music Video Conference in 1993, during which the artist-cum-director spoke about her desire to lens her own clips. Lauper directed her new video in New York with celebrated DP Lazlo Kovacs. LaMure executive produced the shoot.

THAT TODDLIN' TOWN: "Over The Edge," the New York-based alternative-clip show produced by Jack Wendorf, blew onto the Windy City's UHF outlet WJYS, channel 62, Feb. 13. The 60-minute show airs Monday-Saturday at 2 a.m. WJYS reaches more than 3 million broadcast households, as well as 1 million cable households. "Over The Edge" also airs in markets in Pennsylvania, New York, California, and Louisiana.

SURF'S UP: Restless Records is targeting about 150 skate and surf shops nationwide to introduce Beowulf's new album, "2 Cents," which hits the streets April 25. A video of death-defying skate and surf stunts, backed by five new Beowulf tracks, arrives in shops equipped with video monitors March 1.

QUICK CUTS: Video programmers who belong to the Music Video Assn. can receive a 50% reduction on the registration fee to the Bermuda Music Video Festival March 9-12. Qualified members will pay $99 to register. Contact MVA executive director Jill Karagezian in the association's New York office.

Coca-Cola To Quench German Musical Thirst

■ BY WOLFGANG SPAHR

HAMBURG—Coca-Cola is doubling its support for live music in Germany this year to $1.5 million, but the sponsorship's focus will be limited to large-scale events.

The program is using the banner "Always Music" as an extension of its long-established "Always Coca-Cola" slogan. The name change reflects a shift in direction toward high-profile, first-division events, as opposed to its strategy of two years ago, when it sponsored individual bands.

Coca-Cola's newly appointed, Essen-based music manager Kerstin Bestmann says the aim of "Always Music" is to build a solid customer base for the company among young people: 20% percent of Coca-Cola drinkers are between ages 12-19, and 50% are under 29.

To reinforce the message, a school-band competition called "Coca-Cola City Rock" has been launched for the youngest music fans.

The school-band competition—for which 360 bands playing 160 concerts in 16 cities will compete—also will be supported by concert promoter Marek Lieberberg, the German Phono Academy, BMG Ariola, and the World of Music (WOM) retail chain.

Of the first-division events, Coca-Cola's sponsorship will benefit the Rock Am Ring and Rock Im Park festivals—which it supports jointly with MTV Europe—and six Rock Over Germany festivals this year.

Coca-Cola has been involved in Germany's music scene for a while. The "MTV Coca-Cola Report" has been running on MTV Europe for seven years, and there is talk of a similar partnership with German music-TV channel VIVA. In addition, Coca-Cola has been presenting the "Coca-Cola Live Concerts" radio program on the Fritz, BR3, RPR, and SDR3 stations since 1993 and will shortly expand to include NDR (N-Joy).

Says Bestmann, "The name of Coca-Cola has always been linked with music. There was the campaign with Robin Beck and her song 'First Time,' and in 1993 we staged a big European music festival ["Coke Is The Music"] which was broadcast in 25 countries. Now we want to expand the use of music in advertising even further."

The rationale for this marketing strategy, she says, is to support music to such an extent that it becomes just as important for young people as sports.

In fact, Bestmann predicts "music will replace youngsters' interest in sports in the future."

European Indie Groups Make Their Stand

Spanish Labels Fight Radio 3 Pop Plan

■ BY HOWELL LLEWELLYN

MADRID—The Spanish independent music scene is in revolt. Seventy-one indie labels have formed the Coordinating Committee Of Independent Record Labels to fight government plans to convert Radio 3 Pop into a network based on education programs, shows for pensioners, and the "dramatization of great works of universal literature."

The problem is that state-run Radio 3 has for more than 15 years been the only national radio network to dedicate several hours a day to alternative and independent music, while the private music networks are tied to chart-based formulas.

The plan, called Radio 3 Culture, was revealed at a meeting of the board of directors of Radio Television Española (RTVE), which includes Radio Nacional de España (RNE), of which Radio 3 is a part. It is expected to be approved by late February.

One of the most important allies of the outraged indies is Radio 3 director Carlos Garrido. He says, "I share their fears and am against the plan, but I doubt if many of the board members even know I exist."

The board consists of political appointees named by each party in the parliament, and its members rarely have inside knowledge of radio or musical expertise. Their job is to see that RNE loses as little money as possible, and for obvious reasons few of them are likely to possess great interest in the independent music scene.

Christina Hernaiz, a spokeswoman for the indies committee, says, "We calculate that Radio 3 will lose 12 hours of music a day under the plan, and that will include all the specialist programs that are a beacon of light amid the deplorable radio formulas of the private networks."

She adds, "The independent music situation in Spain in terms of access to TV and radio is frankly distressing even with Radio 3's support. But if this small support is taken away from us, our records and artists will pass into the most absolute ostracism, and many of us will have to close our companies, which currently give work to thousands of people."

The committee is planning protest concerts that will include sympathetic artists from the multinational labels, and "street events that will cause quite a stir," says Hernaiz.

She says the committee has "absolutely nothing against the culture planned for Radio 3, but what they are doing is dumping these programs on the area of least resistance at an institutional level, the alternative music scene. Understandably, the other RNE nets [Radio 1 is mainstream pop, Radio 2 is classical, Radio 4 exists only in Catalonia, and Radio 5 is 24-hour news] do not want programs that only a few university students will listen to."

Radio 3 Pop has pioneered new age, ethnic music, flamenco, jazz, folk, experimental music, and underground rock, an area that Hernaiz describes as "a dynamic sector that does not ask for subsidies, which generates its own infrastructures, and employs thousands of creative talents."

Hernaiz points out that even bullfighting receives government grants as an official element of Spanish culture, while the independent music scene is officially ignored. "We are not asking for a minister of rock as in France, or a state organization that helps new music forms, as in Belgium and Holland. We just want public radio to consider independent music as a cultural fact."

Garrido points out that music will still be a feature of the new Radio 3, and that the new programming will not take place until the plan is approved. "If I am still director then, I will express my view, but I must say that the plan worries me, and I share the concern of the committee."

RTVE describes the plan as one of "redefinition and reorganization" with the aim of converting Radio 3 into "a network with a culture and educational content." It says, "RNE considers that in order to adapt to the character of public service that must override all its missions, the content [of Radio 3] must be changed in part for another [mission] that is eminently cultural."

The plan was presented by RTVE director Jordi Garcia Candau and RNE director Diego Carcedo. Nei-

■ BY MARK DEZZANI

MILAN—Italy's independent music-industry association AFI is coming to terms this week with the defection of several of its principal members.

RTI Music, the company owned by Italian prime minister Silvio Berlusconi's Fininvest group, has left AFI to join the rival IFPI-recognized FIMI organization, which is home to Italy's multinationals and major-affiliated indies.

In addition, the RTI-distributed label Sugar, BMG-Ricordi-distributed Carosello, and the Brescia-based dance indie Media officially have switched camps from AFI to FIMI, along with 16 smaller labels.

The exodus of some of AFI's most important associates follows the breakdown of talks between AFI and FIMI last December that were aimed at reunifying the two bodies. Italy's majors broke away from AFI to form FIMI in 1992, claiming they were underrepresented, given their dominant market share.

AFI claims the talks broke down over failure to agree on rights issues—mainly whether a major or its indie affiliate should own the master of any recording and over the distribution of income from neighboring rights. However, Gerolamo Dominioni Caccia, president of FIMI and managing director of Warner Music's Italian affiliate CGD, says, "The problem of rights seems to be an excuse for other problems that AFI is experiencing. AFI wants to be an association of producers and artists, whereas FIMI is an expression of the Italian music industry as a whole.

"AFI must understand that their position has changed," he says. "In the past year, they have lost 40% of their representational market share."

RTI managing director Roberto Magrini says, "As vice president of AFI, I was one of the principal protagonists in favor of reunifying the two organizations. Along with the other companies that have left AFI, I maintain that a unified front for the industry was one of the most important considerations. And since the will to achieve this was divided within AFI, those in favor of reunification decided to leave AFI on friendly terms."

The latest defections from AFI follow the August departure of Italy's largest independent domestic producer/distributor, the Ricordi group, which was purchased by BMG Ariola.

AFI president Franco Donato says he remains unfazed by the changes, and that he is optimistic that the indie association can survive and strengthen its position this year. He says, "There are innovative new companies being created all the time who are joining AFI."

"The companies that left wanted to have a rapport with the majors at all costs," Donato says. "We are not

French Music Biz Grew Just 2.6% In '94

SNEP Cites Hypermarkets As One Cause Of Fragility

■ BY PHILIPPE CROCC

PARIS—The French record industry grew only by 2.6% in value in 1994 compared with the previous year.

Statistics for 1994 released by the French record-industry organization SNEP say the value of record-company deliveries was $1.21 billion compared with $1.15 billion in 1993.

CD album sales rose by 8% in units and in value, while cassettes fell by about 14%. Single sales fell 16% in value, and vinyl LPs decreased 11%.

SNEP president Patrick Zelnick says the figures show the French music industry "becoming fragile" at a "crucial turning point after the CD explosion in the middle of the 1980s."

Zelnick cites the growth figures returned by the industry during that period—from a peak of 30% per year to 10% in 1990—and suggests there are numerous causes for the stagnation.

The most important, in his eyes, is the pressure on prices imposed by super- and hypermarkets, which in France claim 50% of record sales, compared with 30% in the U.K. "If we allow these stores to continue selling records at loss, we will kill off traditional retailers and even the specialized chains, like Virgin, FNAC, Madison, and Nuggets," he says. There are now only 250 traditional record retailers in France—down from 3,000 in 1970.

Zelnick sees a particular threat in ultracheap classic CDs imported from eastern Europe, which in France retail at between 5 to 10 francs ($1 to $2).

"This issue is at the top of SNEP's agenda," says Zelnick. "We must establish with the Ministry of Culture a minimum price for records and redefine the practice of selling at loss."

Zelnick says that SNEP is discussing with the French fair-trade office a minimum wholesale price system aimed at preventing excessive differences among retail outlets.

Another key issue is the high level of value-added tax imposed on recorded product in France—18.6% against 5.5% for other cultural goods. Zelnick calls on international labels body IFPI to take up the matter with the European Union in Brussels.

A major filip to record sales would be provided by greater airplay for music—and especially French repertoire—on radio and TV, Zelnick says. Under new legislation, radio stations as of this year must introduce a 40% quota for French product. French acts have a 48% share of record sales.

Zelnick says it is urgent to plan now for the next generation of French artists. These artists would be aided by the government plan to set up a system of financial advances for new productions. In 1994, $64.9 million were invested in French production by SNEP member companies, $19.4 million of which was spent on new talent.

Among other specifics of the new SNEP data: total units: 112 million, up 0.06% in 1993; value up 2.64%. CD albums: 87 million, up 8.1%; value up 8%. Cassettes: 25 million, down 14%; value down 15%. Vinyl LPs: 780,000, down 21%; value down 11%. Singles: 14.9 million, down 20%; value down 16%. Cassette two-titles comprised 14% of singles sales; PolyGram halted production in March '94, Sony in December.

The exchange rate used in this story is 5.27 francs to the dollar.

STAR TV To Air Satellite Radio Channels Asian Markets To Get Varied Musical Programming

■ BY MIKE LEVIN

HONG KONG—STAR TV will bolster its claim as Asia's biggest broadcaster when it airs the first of as many as seven satellite radio channels in late February or early March.

WAVE is the experiment, a "barker" channel of 24-hour adult contemporary programming that will be used to "grab as many ears as possible," says Mike Mackay, general manager of the new operation.

"It's not meant to be a revenue generator. We are simply testing a product that hasn't been tried before. There is a lot of excess capacity on the satellites [serving Asia], and we've got something to put up there."

The channel will broadcast via a subcarrier frequency on an AsiaSat 1 transponder throughout its 53-country footprint. Free-to-air broadcasts will be through spare television channels, FM modulators, or direct-to-home transmission.

Future channels will include classical, jazz, country, rock, and world music, as well as programming tailored to individual markets, such as Indian film soundtracks and Tagalog broadcasts for Filipino overseas workers.

Initially, STAR plans to market its radio channels as filler for stores, factories, hotels, and restaurants to develop consumer awareness. WAVE will have no news and weather voice-overs.

Once the programming is accepted, the next step is to create commercial stations through rebroadcasting by local affiliates or direct-to-home sales. The biggest question is whether radio can be viewed as a panregional product, in the same way the network's V music channel has succeeded.

With most broadcasters dealing to get into television, pan-Asian radio has been criticized because of the individuality of domestic music tastes.

The decision to get in now was made by Gary Davey, general manager of STAR and former boss of Sky Radio in the U.K., because of STAR's ability to split signals for specific markets. For example, WAVE will broadcast in English through the southern part of the satellite footprint and in Mandarin within the northern range.

WAVE general manager Mackay says the project is not as big a gamble as it might appear, because investment costs are low and because Asian governments are privatizing radio frequencies far faster than they are television frequencies.

Says Mackay, "You don't need a license if you deliver it through spare television channels or by an FM modulator. In places like India, cable operators can use WAVE on spare TV capacity to promote other channels or even themselves.

"Radio station rebroadcasting is just as simple. [Asian radio] licenses are owned by people who don't really know what programming is. If we supply the right programming, I think our potential base is an affiliate in every city."

Van Halen Play Live On European Radio

AMSTERDAM—Van Halen performed what is claimed to be its first show to be broadcast live by European radio while on a two-day promotional trip here.

The one-hour concert in Arnhem went out on the "Countdown Cafe," the weekly rock show of Dutch public broadcaster Veronica. The surprise gig was attended by 1,100 people, including Warner Music staff from the U.S. and Europe.

Rob Schouw, marketing manager of Warner Music Benelux, says it was the first time the band had played live on radio in Europe.

Arcade To Launch A Cable Music Channel In Holland

AMSTERDAM—Dutch multinational record company Arcade, which has affiliates in 11 European countries, has unveiled a plan to establish two national, commercial television stations—including a music channel—in the Netherlands (Billboard, Feb. 18).

The company submitted an application to the Dutch authorities last week for the appropriate licenses, and media analysts here believe Arcade will be given the permits it seeks.

Fully financed by Arcade, the cable-delivered stations will be called Arcade TV and TV 10 Gold; Arcade TV will be a youth-oriented music station described by a company spokesman as "the Dutch equivalent of MTV." TV 10 Gold will show nonmusic, established series.

Arcade already owns Holland's most popular radio station, Radio 10 Gold, as well as two other radio stations in Holland, Love Radio and Classic Radio.

Arcade says it is aiming for a 3% share of the Dutch TV market with Arcade TV. Han Nieman, president of the Dutch advertising industry trade body VEA, believes the station could have a bright future. "MTV is very popular among Dutch youngsters, and a Dutch equivalent could gain quite some impact," he says.

U.K. Government Probes & Praises Music Biz Exports

LONDON—The British government says it sees no contradiction in its lauding the U.K. music industry for the success of its exports, while simultaneously mounting its second, official investigation into the business in two years.

The first inquiry by the government's Monopolies & Mergers Commission (MMC) into the supply of recorded music in the U.K. is believed to have cost record companies up to $20 million to respond. The MMC's report, published a year ago, found no evidence of malpractice.

Now the MMC is probing authors' body the Performing Right Society in another yearlong investigation.

However, at a Feb. 9 high-profile function in honor of the music industry's export achievements, trade minister Ian Taylor said he did not think it inappropriate of the government to be investigating an industry that it now was praising.

"MMC inquiries are often extremely valuable because they air issues that are of public concern," he said. "They are therefore justified on that basis."

Taylor was principal guest at a high-profile event to launch the report by industrial research association British Invisibles. The document, which collates earnings of the whole music industry for the first time, shows that the U.K. record industry earned $1.7 billion in overseas sales in 1993 (Billboard, Feb. 18).

The report reveals the bulk of the money—$967 million—was made by record companies, with publishers contributing $400 million, performers making $155 million, and musical instruments accounting for $132 million.

Taylor congratulated the music industry for its "positive contribution to the British balance of payments." JEFF CLARK-MEADS that was available for comment, and an RNE spokesman said he could make no comment until the plan had been approved or turned down. The latter is very unlikely, as the plan is backed by the ruling Socialist party, which, with support from Catalan nationalist nationalists on the board, has a majority.

Hernaiz is head of promotion at Madrid record import company Running Circle. Among other important labels on the committee are Nuevos Medios, Triquinose, La Fabrica Magnetica, Fonomusico, Manzana Discos, Munster Records, Por Caridad Producciones, On The Rocks, Compadres, and Siroco Records. The 71 concerns are based in Madrid, Barcelona, San Sebastian, Valencia, Tenerife, Bilbao, Pamplona, Castellon, and Zaragoza.

KEY LABELS LEAVE ITALY'S INDIE GROUP AFI

AFI retains more than 150 medium and small domestic companies that, it claims, represent a 30% market share—a figure hotly contested by FIMI, which claims to represent 90% of the market.

FIMI's Caccia says that much of the discrepancy can be accounted for by duplication of earnings from indie/major collaborations. "The dance indie [and AFI member] New Music distributes vinyl and CD singles for several majors, including PolyGram, Sony, and BMG-Ricordi, while Ala Bianca is distributed by CGD," he says.

AFI's Franco Donato maintains that figures relating to his members encompass domestic sales and distribution. "Royalty earnings from exports would add a further [$62.5 million] to their overall figures," he says.

While official revenue figures for FIMI members are expected by the end of the month, AFI says its market share is derived from the $156.3 million of revenues declared by its members. The principal indie earners still associated with AFI include Nuova Fonit Cetra—90% owned by state broadcaster RAI and 10% by BMG-Ricordi—which grossed $25 million in 1993, and indie dance producer/distributor Dig It ($31.3 million), Time/Disco Magic ($28 million), Flying ($18.8 million), and New Music ($12.5 million).

In the wake of RTI's departure,

AFI has announced several executive changes. Freelance public-relations agent Tania Sachs becomes press director, replacing Franco Crepax, who has left the organization. Nuova Fonit Cetra director general Carlo Latini becomes AFI vice president, replacing RTI managing director Magrini.

One of AFI's initiatives is the creation of the international indie representative body, FIPI, which is intended as a parallel to IFPI.

The new organization will be unveiled in Rome in March, says Donato, who adds that indie associations from France, Canada, Belgium, Spain, and Germany already have agreed to join or are negotiating to do so (Billboard, Feb. 11).

Van Halen's New Album Art Out Of 'Balance' In Japan

BY STEVE McCLURE

TOKYO—Even though it costs an average of 400 yen ($4) more, the Japanese pressing of Van Halen's "Balance" is outselling the import version five to one. That's because the album's controversial cover, which features what appears to be a pair of naked Siamese-twin children, has proved a turn-off with Japanese music fans.

Warner Music Japan spokesman Jonny Thompson explains that the "Siamese twin" cover (which is actually a composite picture of the same child) annoys some Japanese consumers because it reminds them of a well-publicized incident a few years back when a pair of Vietnamese Siamese twins were brought to this country to be separated by a Japanese medical team.

"Retailers have called us to tell us that people have come into their stores and said it's just gross," Thompson says. Anticipating such a reaction, WMJ used an alternative cover provided by its American parent company featuring an image of just one child.

So far, the import version of "Balance" has sold only about 50,000 units in Japan, despite beating the WEA Japan domestic version into stores by a week and selling for roughly $4 less. The domestic pressing, which contains a bonus track for the Japanese market, has moved 250,000 units.

"Our intention was to provoke thought, discussion, and reflection (with the cover art)," Van Halen said in a media statement. "As parents, we consider children our most precious resource, never to be exploited or demeaned."

Despite WEA Japan's concerns about consumer reaction to the cover, Mike Inman, managing director of Virgin Megastores Japan, says Virgin hasn't had any negative reaction from its customers.

"Both versions of the album are selling well," he says.

Japanese Quake Concerts Set Music Industry Plans Charity Shows

TOKYO—Japan's music industry is pulling together to help victims of the massive earthquake that shook the western Japanese city of Kobe Jan. 17.

At a Feb. 14 press conference here, leading figures from all sectors of the industry announced that they will jointly sponsor three charity concerts March 7, 8, and 9 in the 10,000-seat Nippon Budokan arena. The concerts will feature a host of famous Japanese artists.

"Those of us who are connected to the music industry have decided to help in this emergency, even though we know our power is very small," organizers of the concert series, titled "March Of The Music," said in a statement released to the press.

Tickets to each concert will go for 5,000 yen ($50) apiece, with proceeds going to relief agencies such as the Japan Red Cross. Organizations sponsoring the concerts include the Recording Industry Assn. Of Japan, the Japan Music Publishers Assn., the Japanese Society For Rights Of Authors, Composers, And Publishers, the Japan CD Rental Commerce Trade Assn., and the All-Japan Concert Promotion Assn.

Artists volunteering their time to appear in the shows include Kome Kome Club, Chage & Aska, Miki Imai, Tokyo Ska Paradise Orchestra, and Bakufu Slump.

In response to one reporter, who noted that the Rolling Stones will be playing a series of dates at the Tokyo Dome in early March, well-known concert promoter Jiro Uchino said he plans to ask the British band's management whether any members of the group would be available to make an appearance at one of the charity shows.

WEA Picks Up Odds' New Set For Canada Vid Play, Tragically Hip Tour Help Raise Act's Profile

BY LARRY LeBLANC

TORONTO—When Kim Cooke, VP of A&R at Warner Music Canada, heard last February that the Odds had parted with Los Angeles-based Zoo Records, he quickly moved to sign the Canadian alternative-style pop band. The result is the Jan. 31 Canada-only release of the band's album "Good Weird Feeling" on the WEA label.

Though the Vancouver-based quartet had recorded two critically acclaimed Zoo albums, "Neopolitan" (1991) and "Bedbugs" (1993), and had reached something of a cult status in North America, both albums have had disappointing sales.

The debut has sold 5,000 units in the U.S. to date, according to SoundScan, and 11,000 units in Canada, according to Carol Wright, VP of artist marketing at BMG Music Canada. The follow-up boasts U.S. sales of 11,000 units, and Canadian sales of 21,000 units.

"I'd loved the singles, and the best-known tracks from their records, and wanted to be associated with them," says Cooke. "I knew they were primed for a breakthrough."

The Odds and their manager Chris Blake, who also handles Toad The Wet Sprocket, were, however, highly apprehensive about directly signing with a Canadian-based company that didn't have a firm commitment for an American license of the finished album.

"It was a big issue," says singer/guitarist Craig Northey. "There's always been the stigma of [a group] signing with a Canadian company, and then going cup-in-hand from Canada to America [for a release]."

From Vancouver's unique, inbred, vibrant, and insular musical community, thousands of miles away from the nearest major record label, the Odds members also had not forgotten their early days, when major Canadian-based labels ignored them.

"In 1989, nobody paid attention to us in Canada, but we had a couple of A&R guys from Los Angeles come and see us, so we headed there," says Northey. "Then a buzz started in Los Angeles, and we signed with Zoo. We were something different to American labels but, in Canada then, something different wasn't a popular idea."

Cooke argues that Canadian acts today shouldn't discount signing at home. "By signing in Canada, a band has a major level of proprietary interest and commitment from the signing company," he says.

The Odds accepted Cooke's argument and signed with Warner Music Canada. Cooke is now canvassing Warner-affiliated labels in the U.S. for release of the new album.

"We felt if we made a great record, we had a chance [of U.S. success] doing it this way," says Northey. "Our feeling was there was no longer a stigma of moving from Canada to America, especially with people connecting in the past year like [Canadian-based signings] the Crash Test Dummies and Sarah McLachlan."

The Odds also were duly impressed that Cooke had specific goals for their new recording. While he wanted to retain the band's well-honed pop sensibility and quirky lyrical humor, Cooke was seeking a harder-edge rock approach from them. "They're an amazing live band, and that hadn't been captured on record," he says. "This is the first album that comes close to capturing what they're about live."

Northey stresses that the album's seven-week recording and mixing schedule, which was double the time it took to record their earlier albums, was a key factor in the set's quality. The more leisurely schedule provided them with time to deliberate on what they were recording and to retrack some things.

"If somebody felt a song didn't make a connection but couldn't explain why, we had time to redo the song," he says.

Additionally, it turned out the band needed time to regroup when drummer and founding member Paul Brennan decided to bail midway during session, and ex-Bryan Adams/Jimmy Barnes drummer Pat Steward was brought aboard to complete the lineup, which also includes bassist Doug Elliot and guitarist Steven Drake.

Storing an abundance of material from a two-year recording layoff, the band had decided in advance not to test material live. "Playing live you might miss some element that the studio can offer in terms of perspective," Northey says. "'Break The Bread' and 'Leave It There' were jammed out in the studio and then immediately fleshed out. If we'd played them live for awhile, we might have done our best versions in Nanaimo [British Columbia] or Brampton [Ontario], not in the studio."

One obstacle that has plagued the Odds in Canada has been their lack of profile. But that situation already has begun to change. MuchMusic, Canada's national video network, has put their video for the album's leadoff track, "Truth Untold," directed by Curtis Wehrfritz, in heavy rotation. In addition, the Odds currently are on the bottom end of the Tragically Hip's 20-date sell-out "Day For Night" tour across the country.

All this is paying off. In the Feb. 20 issue of Canadian trade The Record, "Good Weird Feeling" is listed as No. 56 on the top retail album chart, and "Truth Untold" is No. 5 on its contemporary album radio chart and No. 54 on its contemporary hit radio chart. "These chart numbers are far beyond anything they've done before," says The Record's chart editor Paul Tuch.

On the band's past lack of visibility here, Northey says, "Our records would come out earlier in America, and we'd start touring there. By the time we came to Canada, it was after the fact. The Tragically Hip tour is now certainly exposing our profile, and we're heading out again across the country in our own right afterwards."

Northey admits the band is anxious to reach American audiences as well. "We may do one-off U.S. dates because I'd like the people who are waiting for this record to get it," he says. "But we want to have a fair crack at this country before we start dividing our attention."

GLOBAL MUSIC PULSE

THE LATEST MUSIC NEWS FROM AROUND THE PLANET

EDITED BY DAVID SINCLAIR

NETHERLANDS: It seems the mania for tribute albums knows no bounds. A virtual who's who of the region's most happening acts (14 of them Dutch, two Belgian), including Bettie Serveert, Arno, Darryl-Ann, dEUS, Burma Shave, Shine, the Prodigal Sons, the Scene, Tröckener Kecks, and the Nits, have contributed a total of 16 tracks to "Als De Rook Is Verdwenen" (Phonogram), an album of songs by the veteran singer/guitarist Boudewijn De Groot. Originally a protest singer, De Groot was known in the '60s as the Dutch equivalent of Bob Dylan (although it was his friend Lennaert Nijgh who wrote the Dutch-language lyrics to most of his songs). Now 50, De Groot is still fondly remembered by the older generation of record buyers, but with such an impressive lineup of new acts on hand to reinterpret his work, younger fans will find this album the perfect introduction to a Dutch legend. WILLEM HOOS

FRANCE: In 1992, the classical music soundtrack of Belgian director Gerard Corbiau's movie "Tous Les Matins Du Monde" (Auvidis) proved an astounding success, given its baroque style of music performed on period instruments. It sold 700,000 copies worldwide, including 80,000 in the U.S. And the classical soundtrack of Corbiau's new movie, "Farinelli," appears to be doing even better. While a good classical music album might sell between 1,000-5,000 copies a week in France, "Farinelli" has sold 100,000 copies (gold status) in just 10 days. The movie tells the true, but dramatized, story of a castrated male singer who lived in the 17th century, a time when women were banned from singing in churches. As a castrato, his job was to reach the high notes normally achieved only by women. The lead is played by Stefano Dionisi, a young Italian actor. Luckily for him, computerized mixing techniques were able to simulate the vocal sound of a castrated male singer by combining the voices of American counter-tenor Derek Lee-Ragin and Polish soprano Ewa Godlewska. This synthesized voice performs works by Handel, Giovanni Pergolesi, Porpora, and Riccardo Broschi. PHILIPPE CROCCQ

EGYPT: Twenty years after her death, the legendary singer Oum Kultoum is still the biggest-selling act on cassette in the Arab world. Last year, her song "Inta Omri," a collaboration with Muhammad Abdel Wahab originally released in 1964, sold more than 300,000 cassettes in this country alone. At the same time, another of her landmark recordings, "Al-Atlat" (Ruins), written by Riad Elsunbatti and first released in 1966, sold more than 200,000 copies. Since her sudden death Feb. 3, 1975, many new artists have found fame throughout the Arab world by imitating Kultoum, and her songs are performed daily all around the globe, often as instrumental pieces that lend a sense of respectability to any occasion. Her appeal was, and still is, something all Arabs agree about, and she met many heads of state during her travels. Her arrival on the music scene in the early '20s had a tremendous impact, and by employing many top composers she encouraged the emergence of a new generation of talent, which changed the direction of Arab music. She is still sorely missed, and the young songwriters of today are badly in need of another artist like her to introduce their songs to a wider market. MUHAMMAD HIJAZI

NEW ZEALAND: There were several reasons to explain why Dave Dobbyn (Pulse, Jan. 14) played such a blistering show at Auckland's Powerstation last month. It was the final gig of a lengthy, acclaimed national tour. His Neil Finn-produced album, "Twist" (Sony), was about to be certified platinum (15,000 copies), and plans were being finalized for a June release in three key territories: Australia (Epic), the U.K. (Columbia), and the U.S. (TriStar—the label that released Kiwi singer/songwriter Shona Laing's recent album, "Shona"). And Dobbyn's wife is expecting their second child later in the year. But all these reasons to be cheerful aside, Dobbyn's show was a powerful reminder of just how much he has contributed to the musical culture of his homeland. The Kiwi performer's long and varied set embraced the wiry rock songs and aching ballads of "Twist," made diversions to visit the Velvet Underground's "Sweet Jane" and the Beatles' "Rain," and showcased classic Dobbyn material from the past two decades, notably a fiery version of his guitar-driven hit "Be Mine Tonight," which he originally recorded with Th' Dudes. With new management by Grant Thomas (Crowded House, Tim Finn) and his finest album yet in hand, Dobbyn certainly had plenty to celebrate. And a loyal, sweaty, capacity audience was only too happy to acknowledge his continued success. GRAHAM REID

U.K.: Mafia & Fluxy are fast joining the ranks of this country's premier remixers. The two brothers Leroy (Mafia) and Dave (Fluxy) Heywood from Tottenham, North London, have recently remixed Janet Jackson's "You Want This," Sting's "This Cowboy Song," and Aaliyah's current single, "Down With The Click." This high-profile activity follows years of saturating the reggae market with their unique sound both here and in Jamaica. The brothers credit their new manager, Jackie Davidson, for much of their newfound success. It was her publicity campaigns that helped to launch the mainstream careers of Shabba Ranks, Mad Cobra, Patra, and C.J. Lewis, and since picking up the reins with Mafia & Fluxy she has steered the duo in the direction of stars such as Boy George, Danii Minogue, Chaka Demus & Pliers, and MC D. Inspired by the example of their heroes Sly & Robbie, Mafia & Fluxy have founded their own label, produced multi-artist compilations, and started to build a recording studio with a view to nurturing more U.K. talent. KENNEDY MENSAH as norteños.

NORTENA'S CORRIDOS OFFER UNCENSORED DEPICTION OF MEXICO'S DAILY STRUGGLES

"When the Mexican Revolution was going on, the songs spoke of what was happening," says prominent songsmith Enrique Franco, author of classic corridos such as "La Jaula De Oro" and "Pedro Y Paldo."

"Before, people found out what was happening in other towns through the songs," says Franco. "It was like the news. Now there's no revolution. But other things are happening about which we have to speak."

Indeed, norteña artists such as Los Tigres Del Norte and Los Huracanes Del Norte are Mexico's answer to American rap acts and, like the Anglo verse masters, they have attracted their share of controversy.

Many Mexicans abhor the corridos' violent images and lower-class cachet. Even Mexico's right-of-center National Action Party (PAN) has gotten into the act, criticizing norteña artists and songwriters for glorifying the drug trade.

But leading norteña composers such as Teodoro Bello, who wrote the 1993 corrido hit "Pacas De A Kilo" (Kilo Packs) says he and his counterparts pen hard-hitting lyrics about drugs and violence, "because it's happening. It's not like we like the fact it's happening. It's like the press. You can avoid writing about it, but if you don't, someone else will."

Bello says that if he is accused of drug dealing, "I say the [political] parties do worse things than I do. With this peso devaluation, I'll go on TV tomorrow to tell people that this is a betrayal of the country."

Los Tigres Del Norte band leader Jorge Hernández, echoing rap artists' sentiments, says, "The only thing that we do is sing about what happens every day. We're like interpreters, then the public decides the songs they like."

Last year, Franco wrote and recorded a tune that attracted radio listeners in droves in San Jose, Calif. Entitled "Vendetta De Michoacán," the song recounted a real-life feud between two families from the Pacific Mexican state of Michoacán who were fighting over control of the drug trade in their small town. The feud had accounted for dozens of murders, including an ambush in which 17 persons died.

A smash regional hit, "Vendetta De Michoacán" was receiving heavy rotation on Spanish radio stations in San Jose, until they began getting calls asking them to stop playing it. Callers said many members of the feuding families had moved to nearby Redwood City, and the song was inflaming passions.

Guillermo Prince, program director of KLOK-AM San Jose recalls a female relative of a station staffer asking that the rotation of "Vendetta" be "slowed down, because there was some relatives of the people mentioned in the corrido. One day when the song was being played, the relative ran into someone who said, 'Hey, there's your cousin's song again.'"

Prince notes that airplay—and tensions—gradually cooled. "Vendetta" was just like every song: It lasted five or six weeks, and it came down," he says.

At times, the ties between corrido-singing norteña bands and drug trafficking are more than purely musical. Last July, several members of Los Huracanes Del Norte were injured when a car bomb exploded outside a Guadalupe hotel. The band was playing a party for family members of Raphael Caro Quintero, one of Mexico's most notorious drug dealers who now is in prison. A rival drug gang was suspected in the attack.

Los Tigres Del Norte, left, changed norteña music forever with their early '70s hit "Contrabando Y Traición." The group continues to alter its lyrics and style, now distancing themselves from the violence and drugs that have marked norteña lyrics. Los Huracanes Del Norte, right, ran afoul of that underworld when several band members were injured by a car bomb last July while performing at a party for relatives of a jailed drug dealer.

Despite their sullied reputations in some quarters, corridos have helped norteña music become more popular than ever. Los Tigres Del Norte, Los Huracanes Del Norte, and Los Invasores De Nuevo León sell millions of records and play to thousands of fans from Mexico City to Minneapolis. In 1994, for example, Los Tigres Del Norte headlined a Cinco de Mayo festival in Los Angeles that drew 100,000 spectators. Mexican record labels, particularly indie imprints, have benefited, as well, from corrido-singing norteña acts.

Mexico City-based indie Musivisa, for whom Los Tigres Del Norte record, as well as indie labels, such as Disa, DLV, MCM, located in the northern Mexican city Monterrey, have long dominated the rural-rooted sounds called "música popular." Norteña, ranchera, and banda are among the leading components of música popular.

Monterrey is recognized within the industry as a stronghold for norteña acts, some of which are not necessarily corrido-based. For example, Disa's homegrown act Norteños' Clan has drawn rave reviews for "Norteños De Corazón Puro," a norteña package containing cover songs of hits by pop superstar Luis Miguel.

LABEL INTEREST

The multinational labels, perhaps belatedly, have taken notice of norteña's growth as part of the overall upswing of música popular.

In 1994, Warner Music Mexico debuted a new label, Raza, which is "dedicated to música popular," says label director Lydia Salazar. Though based in Mexico City, Raza has placed its promotion director in Monterrey. EMI Music Mexico is negotiating to acquire DLV, home of Los Invasores De Nuevo León and Leones De Norte, as well as the deep catalog of norteña icon Ramón Ayala Sr.

EMI president Mario Ruiz says EMI is going to open a separate office in Monterrey. "We think that norteño is going to expand," says Ruiz. "It has gone over from the lower class to the middle class. It's accepted as original Mexican music."

Sony maintains an office in Monterrey, staffed with an A&R representative. BMG International's VP Latin, North America, Jesús López says he is nearing completion on a deal to sign two norteña acts, adding, "I have plans to sign five or six acts of this genre."

Salazar says Raza recently signed a norteña act. "This is the first 'grupo norteño' signed to Warner," says Salazar. "We are confident that norteña groups are very strong throughout Mexico."

But Salazar says she is not looking for corrido-rooted norteña artists, since many corridos will not get played on Mexican radio—especially in Pacific states such as Sinaloa and Culiacán where the drug operations are most prevalent. Salazar says "the government does not want to encourage" drug-related activities through radio airplay.

Salazar expects romance-oriented norteña acts will prosper in the coming years.

While KLOK's Prince acknowledges that he stays clear of overly violent corridos, he notes that when he airs a two-hour weekly show of hardcore corridos "the listeners love it."

"Everybody likes songs that mention the small town where they come from and to feel like a tough guy from that town," he says. "They can say, 'Oh I come from the same town as that tough guy so don't mess with me.'"

Mexican immigrants, many of whom migrated to central California, have provided much of the cross-pollination that took norteña from the California cantinas to Mexican stadiums. Norteña's Mexican fan base now stretches to Pacific states Guerrero and Michoacán, far from the Mexico-U.S. border, thanks to returning immigrants whose first contact with norteña likely occurred at a Los Tigres Del Norte dance in California's Central Valley.

"Immigrants here come and go," says Franco, who has lived in San Jose for the past 15 years. "They come here, buy their [norteña] music, and they go back to Mexico, and they play it there. It has been a kind of free promotion."

Such grass-roots marketing says Servando Cano, manager of top norteña artists Ayala and Los Invasores Del Norte, has made norteña a universal music idiom in the Latino markets.

"It's no longer music from a certain territory," says Cano. "It's now more international music." Several years back Los Tigres Del Norte became the first norteña act to play Central America.

Manuel Peña, a University Of Texas professor who wrote a book on the history of norteña music, says norteña took root in the mid-1800s when Czech and German immigrants settled in northern Mexico and south Texas, bringing with them the button accordion and polka. Mexicans on both sides of the border later integrated the accordion and polka with the bass, drums, and an oversized guitar called bajo sexto.

When vocals were added to the music in the 1950s, the songs were based on the idea that the only reason a man was to love a woman was so he could become really inebriated when she became unfaithful. The songs contained an honorable, frontier sort of violence: People who were killed deserved their fate, even though such occurrences were rare.

"If you sing a corrido about people getting killed, and people are dancing to it, it does seem a little incongruous," says Peña.

For decades, norteña remained enconced in a region bounded by Matamoros and Monterrey in Mexico, and Corpus Christi and San Antonio in the U.S. By the 1970s, however, the music was spreading along the Mexico-U.S. border, as well as further into the interior of both countries.

Around the same time, Los Tigres Del Norte was a struggling act that began embracing contemporary societal themes, such as drug smugglers, corrupt police officers, stool pigeons, and brash mojados, or wetbacks. Older norteña artists eschewed such topics in order to remain popular with small-town dance audiences.

Los Tigres Del Norte, in fact, exemplify the persona and growth of the new norteña direction. Like many of their norteña peers, the quintet, known to their fans as Los Tigres, emigrated to San Jose in 1968 while still in their teens. The band soon started playing in bars and small business openings in San Jose and may have remained another nondescript cantina band were it not for the early-'70s hit "Contrabando Y Traición," a song that changed the group and norteña music forever.

"Contrabando" relates the story of an illegal Mexican alien and a Chicana from Texas who are smuggling marijuana from Tijuana to Los Angeles. When they finish the job in L.A., the man says he plans to visit his girlfriend in San Francisco. However, the Chicana is in love with her partner and, in a jealous fit, shoots him in a dark Hollywood alley, disappearing with the ill-gotten cash.

Like many Los Tigres' songs to follow, "Contrabando" is now a norteña classic covered by dozens of artists. The tune's two characters, Emilio Varela and Camelia La Tejana, have become cultural icons for many Mexicans.

"Contrabando" was important because it was the first song that chronicled the nascent drug trade between Mexico and the U.S. "It was like a film," says Hernández. "Plus it was the truth of what was happening in those years. It came out at exactly the right moment. It spoke of the total chaos that is drug trafficking."

The success of "Contrabando" demonstrated to other Mexican acts that there was a huge market for songs about the exploits of dope dealers, whom many immigrants at the time were seeing first-hand as they crossed the border. A slew of drug songs were recorded over the next 15 years, many of which were tailor-made for sequels.

"Contrabando" was followed a few years later, in the early '70s, by Los Tigres' "Ya Encontraron A Camelia" (They Found Camelia), a narrative about the drug mafia looking for the money heisted by Camelia.

Since their initial smash, Los Tigres have dominated norteña, becoming one of the top-selling acts in the Latino market. Further, it is a sign of how far norteña has come that Los Tigres are among the most influential binational bands. They recorded 25 albums, filmed 18 movies, and won a Grammy Award in the Mexican-American category.

"They obviously struck a very responsive chord in the lives of hundreds of thousands of immigrants," says Peña. "Their music is the epitome of the immigrant experience."

Despite their enormous popularity, Los Tigres have never lost their mexicanidad, or Mexicanness, even though they live in the U.S. The band members constantly return to Mexico, speak rough-hewn English, and are only casually aware of the goings-on outside the insulated immigrant community.

Conversely, the band is keenly aware of its audience's lifestyle and personality. In the 1980s, as Mexico's economy unraveled and immigration mushroomed, Los Tigres recorded a string of Mexican pride tunes about mojados. The songs held subtle political undertones sympathetic to the tribulations of Mexican immigrants, further tethering the band to fans in both countries.

Franco's "La Jaula De Oro" (The Gold Cage)—a poignant expression of the Mexican immigrant's ambivalence toward his adopted country—was Los Tigres' most significant tune of that era. After seeing large numbers of immigrants from war-torn Central America spill into the U.S. in the early '80s, Los Tigres recorded another Franco tune "Tres Veces Mojado" (Three Times A Wetback), about a refugee from El Salvador who emigrates first to Mexico, then to the U.S.

Jesús Martínez, a political science professor at Santa Clara University, wrote a doctoral dissertation on the Mexican community in the Silicon Valley.

One chapter of his work was dedicated to Los Tigres, whom he says, "reached a new status when they focused on immigrant-related issues. That gave them a degree of seriousness that other groups didn't have at the time."

In an effort to blaze new musical trails and maintain their 18-25 audience, Los Tigres again are altering their lyrical and musical style, a move certain to be monitored by the band's norteña contemporaries. While other acts continue to focus on violence and the drug trade, Los Tigres have been distancing themselves from those themes.

Rather, Los Tigres now perform slow-paced boleros and bouncy cumbias more romantic than raucous in nature. Observing that norteña in the '60s and '70s was directed toward "adults who drink," Hernández says that the Los Tigres' ability to move with the times has allowed the band to perform for "the children of the people to whom the music was sung before."

In recent years, younger Mexican music fans have gravitated toward corridos recorded in another musical style rooted in German-flavored instrumentation, banda. Still, songsmiths such as Bello insist that the oom-pah flavored banda owes much to norteña.

"Banda needs norteña," says Bello, who has been writing material for several bandas lately. "Many of the hits that banda has are hits done first in the norteña style."

Confab '95: A Time For Hot Topics And Change

BY JIM BESSMAN

Even apart from its first visit to San Diego, NARM's 37th annual confab at the San Diego Convention Center promises to be unusually exciting—if not of pivotal importance—on other counts. There will be hot topics to be sure, including source-tagging and record clubs. But the principals involved in the planning of this year's gathering feel that things will be fundamentally different this time, and that what goes down in San Diego may well determine the future of the trade organization itself.

"What's so exciting about this particular NARM is that it's a transitional convention," says John Salstone, co-owner of M.S. Distributing and convention chairman. "We've had pretty much the same convention the last four, five, six years, and it was time for a change."

Hence the 37th NARM's deep focus on the group's reason for being: product. "We've recognized that what the labels and attendees like the most about the conventions is exposing and breaking new product—and getting people excited about music again," continues Salstone. "That's what we're trying to hit on at this particular convention. But we've also realized that each of the six major distributors and the indies all had different ideas of how they wanted to approach the being squeezed so badly," says Young. "So we'll explore how to run our businesses in that environment, as well as how the industry adapts to new consumer-pricing levels. So it's exciting and scary—and a tough line to walk sometimes."

NARM's executive director Pam Horovitz echoes Young's comments and expects that such concerns will be the topic of intense public and private conversations during the convention. "I think many retailers showed good, solid unit-sales this holiday season, but there's a lot of concern about margins," she says. "It isn't an official topic of conversation for us, but retailers, having addressed whatever they can do in terms of efficiencies and buying controls and aggressive marketing within their own companies, look to extend that dialog with the suppliers."

Of course, continuing discussion on source tagging is all but promised. "I'm sitting between committee recommendations and a board vote, so from the Association standpoint, we continue to aggressively seek source tagging," notes Horovitz. "This will be the second convention since we made that initial recommendation to suppliers: We made it in Orlando, didn't have it by San Francisco, and here we are still plugging away, but I hope there's continued progress."

Indeed, Young hopes that by convention's end, there will be some general industry-wide agreement on electronic article-surveillance issues, "so we all know where we are and can take some actions."

RESEARCH ON CLUBS

Another burning issue—record clubs—will be dealt with in a seminar that Horovitz predicts will be of special interest to the music community because it will involve a research presentation.

"For quite awhile, record clubs have been the source of concern to retailers, who have been particularly irritated about promotional come-ons like eight-CDs-for-a-penny offers—but there hasn't been much hard data available," she says. "We'll present the first real benchmark data about the record-club member and his buying habits vis-a-vis retail, so we think the topic will be of interest not just to the retail community but to the clubs themselves, to see if what we got matches what they got internally. It will be of interest to labels who deal with clubs as well as retail, and to artists—who sign deals with labels, who in turn sell their music to clubs and retail."

Horovitz also anticipates continued interest in retail consolidation as well convention, so we wanted to create an environment for people to do what they wanted to do in the trade-product presentations, or if they wanted a circus, or to rent an aircraft carrier, they could do that, too—with the focus as much as possible staying on the music."

ADAPTING TO THE ENVIRONMENT

Wherehouse Entertainment head and reigning NARM president Scott Young is equally excited about this "Business overall is up, but at the same time, all retailers who report publicly talk about how margins are being squeezed so badly. So we'll explore how to run our businesses in that environment, as well as how the industry adapts to new consumer-pricing levels."

Amid retail consolidation and labels' cost-consciousness, members pop the question: Are conventions a place to exchange ideas and conduct business, or a mere "shmooze-fest"?

The NARM convention has become an issue because of the exorbitant amount of money spent by the six majors to stage product presentations, among other reasons. In preparing for the NARM

Moreover, over the last few years, instead of having meetings piled up one on top of another at the NARM convention, each of the majors has taken it upon itself to hold account meetings right before the convention. In setting up those meetings, majors travel to their branches and invite in major accounts for private meetings where issues are fully discussed. The combined impact of account-consolidation and the pre-NARM meetings has detracted from the importance of the NARM convention.

"The NARM convention has been reduced to one big shmooze-fest," complains one senior distribution-executive with a major. "And quite frankly, we don't think the kind of money we spend at NARM is well spent there anymore."

A sales executive with a large independent label adds, "I get the feeling that we are at that convention as a meal ticket. Labels are associate members of NARM, who funds the convention. To my way of thinking, it is crazy to fund something and then only be an associate member."

A BILLBOARD EXPANDED RETAIL SECTION

Source-Tagging, Downsizing Issues To Be Heard At NARM

GET NARMED: If there's one thing that never fails to get Track's blood circulating, it's the annual NARM extravaganza, and this year's convention, which kicks off this week (Feb. 22-25) in San Diego, promises to be a humdinger. In addition to plenty of good music and controversial issues for attendees to talk about, it has one other distinguishing feature: This year's convention may be the last one in its current format. Music suppliers and the National Assn. of Recording Merchandisers board of directors have been holding conversations on ways to change it. In fact, that probably will be one of the topics at this year's confab.

The big reason behind the move to change the convention's format is money. With retail consolidation, music manufacturers say they are no longer getting a bang for their buck at the meeting and want to deep-six the expensive product presentations. In fact, with the exception of Sony and WEA, the other distributors already have jettisoned the product presentations and instead will host artist showcases. But even that is a costly proposition, so enjoy it while it lasts.

Another key issue sure to be floating throughout the convention is source tagging. Believe it or not, the initiative to have record labels place an electronic article surveillance tag at the point of manufacture is still alive. At last look, manufacturers said that they favored source tagging. It would take the rest of this column and probably next week's column as well to give the blow-by-blow account of how the two-year-old initiative got to its present status, so we'll cut right to the chase. The NARM board is urging manufacturers to begin source tagging CDs first and to worry about other entertainment software formats later. As part of that recommendation, NARM is standing by its selection of the acousto-magnetic technology.

The Recording Industry Assn. of America will hold a meeting on the topic at the convention. As it stands now, each of the major distributors has put forth a different set of issues to be resolved, but, despite the potential obstacles, NARM executive VP Pam Horowitz says she is cautiously optimistic that source tagging will become a reality.

"We are rolling along predicated on the assumption that everyone wants to do it," she says. "We have actually initiated discussions with a few companies on how to roll out a test of how source tagging the CD might work." Camelot will be one of the retailers participating in the test, she adds.

Two other hot issues sure to be touched upon at the convention will be the price war and record clubs. The former has been at the forefront of conversation for more than a year, and there appears to be no letup in sight. Record clubs are always a hot topic at NARM, but this year the discussion might be in a different light. Instead of emotion fueling the talk, this year's debate should be more informed because NARM will present the research results from the study it commissioned on record clubs.

And, of course, after all the talk, music will win the day. NARM expects more than 40 acts to perform during the course of the convention. The artists whom Track is anticipating seeing include the Mavericks, Joe Ely, Matthew Sweet, the Chieftains, Radney Foster, Joan Osborne, Love Battery, Naughty By Nature, and, yes, Foreigner.

The performances will take place in various settings. PGD will host the second incarnation of the PGD Zone each night of the convention. The Zone will kick off Wednesday night with Chely Wright, Dishwalla, and PJ Harvey. Other nights will feature performances by Gino Vanelli, Vybe, Montell Jordan, Rusted Root, Kim Richey, Jordan Page, Steve Kolander, and 4 P.M.

Right before the PGD Zone opens, BMG Distribution is threatening to unleash the "Greatest Musical Show on Earth." Rick Bleiweiss, BMG Distribution senior VP of marketing, says he is leaving his laser-light show at home, but the action from the carnival midway that BMG is creating will more than make up for it. "It will be like a total carnival, with games and lots of drawings for people to win wonderful electronic equipment. We will have sumo wrestling and provide dinner, drinks food, and fun," he says.

Among the acts playing on the midway are Becky Barksdale, Chris Duarte Group, From Good Homes, Tina Moore, Timbuk3, and Lari White, as well as the Chieftains, Sweet, and Foster.

Uni Distribution will host a showcase Saturday night. In addition to Ely and the Mavericks, the GRP All-Star Band and David Arkenstone will perform, as will comedian Craig Shoemaker.

The indie showcase is Thursday night, and among those scheduled to perform are Laura Love, Howard Hewett, as well as Foreigner and Naughty By Nature.

The convention will begin with a Walt Disney Records presentation of "Pocahontas & Rhythm Of The Pride Lands." Disney generally puts on a spectacular presentation at the Video Software Dealers Assn. annual convention, but this is the first time NARM attendees will witness the Disney magic firsthand.

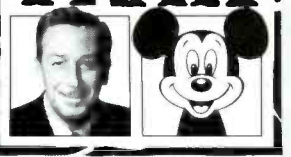

WEA and Sony haven't yet released details of their product presentations; Cema is having its event, which is invitation-only, on a boat. Cema senior VP Joe McFadden declined to specify who is performing because the schedule is still being finalized, but he did say that the boat is big.

A BILLBOARD EXPANDED RETAIL SECTION

Doing Good In The 'Hood

Small freestanders are bucking the superstore trend with catalog, community service and cost-efficiency.

BY DON JEFFREY

While most of the attention in entertainment retail these days is on the superstore and the megastore, some retailers are sticking with another, less flashy, strategy for growth—the small neighborhood store.

Location, location, location are still the most important virtues for the success of ventures like this—whether the stores are freestanding or in a strip mall—but retailers pursuing this plan point out other elements in the equation.

They assert that smaller stores can effectively compete with the big guns through commitments to deep catalog and customer service. They also say that attention to community service is good for business.

"It is essentially our strategy to have neighborhood stores," says Bill Thom, president of Harmony House, most of whose 37 (Michigan and Ohio) stores are freestanders. "It's cost-efficient to run these kinds of stores."

Although the average size of a Harmony House store has grown from 4,000 square feet to 6,000-to-7,000 square feet in recent years, its focus has not expanded beyond recorded music. Home video, video games and CD-ROM are not part of the mix. The chain's slogan is "Music Is All We Do." In fact, Harmony House has even gone deeper into music specialization with the opening of two classical-only stores in one market. Each of these outlets stocks 25,000 CDs.

"We have very deep selection in that size of a store," says Thom of his typical neighborhood outlet. "We're aware of what sells." He says the company stocks more than 60,000 SKUs (stock-keeping units) of CDs and cassettes in its system. The average inventory at cost is $350,000.

Harmony House opens only a handful of stores a year because executives are careful about the kinds of locations in which they'll do business. "We're patient. And we do not borrow money to grow," says Thom.

The executive recognizes the value of the superstore, but maintains that it is not the strategy for Harmony particularly well in markets with a population between 300,000 and 600,000, such as Harrisburg and Reading, Pennsylvania, and Richmond, Virginia. "We can grow profitably in non-mall venues in power strips. That's what we're targeting," he says.

Some factors Van Erlach looks for in selecting sites are strip malls with significant anchors, traffic averaging 40,000 vehicles a day and nearness to a major access road.

He knows other chains are opening or planning to open superstores in many of the markets National Record Mart is in, but he sees a silver lining in that cloud of competition. "When a Media Play goes up, it takes share away, but it's expanding the marketplace, creating sales."

Like other chain executives who believe in the neighborhood store concept, Van Erlach stocks deep catalog despite the relatively small size of his stores. Like Harmony House, National Record Mart achieves that by focusing primarily on music. But National Record Mart takes that one step further, merchandising mostly CDs. "We're not phasing out tapes," insists Van Erlach. "We're meeting customer preferences."

BOTH SIDES OF THE STREET

Some chains are pursuing a double-barreled expansion strategy—superstores for some markets and neighborhood outlets for others.

Gerald Weber, president of music for 540-store Blockbuster Music, says the concept of neighborhood stores is "alive and well" in the former Turtles, Music Plus and Sound Warehouse outlets Blockbuster has acquired in the past few years. But he adds that the new superstores the company has been opening (at 15,000 square feet) have been "outperforming" the smaller units "dramatically."

Blockbuster's freestanding stores (5,000 to 7,000 square feet) carry about 20,000 SKUs of product, says Weber.

The principal advantage of neighborhood stores, according to Weber, is that "If they're well-operated, there's strong loyalty on the part of the customer. They're the convenience store of the music industry."

Ivan Lipton, president of 156-unit Strawberries/Waxie Maxie, says the company continues to open 4,000-to-6,500-square-foot stores, as well as larger outlets, but he declines to talk about the neighborhood concept, citing competitive reasons. "As a strategy, we think it works or we wouldn't be doing it," he says. ■

Blockbuster's Gerald Weber

House to follow. "It didn't make sense to open superstores in this market," says Thom. "We already had the market well-covered. You open too many stores, it starts to cannibalize business."

"They've got the size and the inventory," he says of superstores, "but in a lot of cases, they're missing a certain element—a knowledgeable staff or being in touch with the community."

YEARBOOKS AND SCHOLARSHIPS

Giving something back to the community in which the company does business is a common refrain among retailers who operate neighborhood stores. Harmony House does things like buying ads in student yearbooks, donating to charitable organizations and sponsoring scholarships.

National Record Mart, a 140-unit chain based in Carnegie, Pennsylvania, is also a believer in community service. "We're increasingly getting involved at the grass-roots level, in businesses and schools, with joint promotions and activities," says Julian Van Erlach, VP of operations.

Commenting on neighborhood stores, he says, "We are doing them. It's our belief that there's a strategic niche out there for 8,000-to-10,000-square-foot, principally music, stores."

Van Erlach says the concept works

Beyond LA's Shadow, A Talent-Rich Place In The Sun Heats Up

BY GEORGE VARGA

Until recently, the talent-rich San Diego music scene was more notable for the many gifted artists who were forced to leave town than for those who stayed behind. With Los Angeles just 120 miles away, musicians seeking fame, fortune or just a shot at a record or publishing deal had no choice but to head north. The drain of eclectic talent that resulted saw the departures in the 1960s of such notable local heroes as soon-to-be Byrds bassist Chris Hillman (who played in local bluegrass favorites the Scottsville Squirrel Barkers), progressive-jazz saxophonist Arthur Blythe, R&B singer J.J. Jackson (1966's "But It's Alright") and future Moby Grape singer-bassist Bob Mosley. And in Tijuana, just 17 miles from downtown San Diego, young Mexican guitarist Carlos Santana came up playing blues and rock in area clubs before moving with his family to San Francisco. Other San Diegans who migrated in the '60s included drummer John Guerin, singer-songwriters Michael Franks and Tom Waits, pop hit-makers Gary Puckett & The Union Gap and thud-rock pioneers Iron Butterfly.

Among the more notable artists who lived in, and then left, San Diego prior to the '60s were jazz sax great Harold Land and R&B pioneer Joe "The Honeydrinker" Liggins. Frank Zappa spent his freshman and sophomore highschool years in San Diego in the mid-1950s, drumming in a local R&B group called the Ramblers and getting his introduction to 12-tone music from Mission Bay High School teacher Robert Kavelman.

Between the 1970s and the '90s, the list of prominent musical expatriates grew to include avant diva Diamanda Galas, singer-songwriter Stephen Bishop (whose 1977 hit "On And On" was reworded to remove its San Diego references) and contemporary Christian singer Sandi Patti. Music critic-turned-film-director Cameron Crowe in the late '70s enrolled at Clairemont High School to surreptitiously gather material for his book-turned-movie "Fast Times At Ridgemont High."

Then there were country-rock songstress Rosie Flores; guitar shredder Jennifer Batten (Michael Jackson), ubiquitous studio bassist Nathan East, classical piano prodigy Gustavo Romero and R&B singer Chanté Moore—and a quietly charismatic singer and surfer named Eddie Vedder, who moved to Seattle to join what became Pearl Jam. (The Pearl

Have roots, will rock: Paladins

Jam-inspired Stone Temple Pilots often played in San Diego as Mighty Joe Young, but most of its members had moved north by the time the Pilots formally began.)

LOVE IT OR LEAVE IT

"San Diego has always had a lot of very talented musicians and good bands," says John D'Agostino, who from 1975 to 1991 was pop critic for the weekly San Diego Reader. "It was just accepted after so many years of bands not making it that they would have to leave town. So a lot of musicians left and were no longer associated with San Diego. Or they stayed here and didn't achieve much."

"There was no way to get anywhere in the music business without going to Los Angeles," agrees singer-writer Jack Tempchin, whose many credits include writing or co-writing such hits as the Eagles' "Already Gone" and "Peaceful Easy Feeling" (the latter inspired by "various women in San Diego and a car ride to El Centro"). "I kept trying to find a way to do it without going to L.A., but you had to back then. I moved there in 1976 and moved back to San Diego in the early '80s."

The situation began to improve in the mid-'80s. It was then that three enterprising local roots-rock acts—the Beat Farmers, the Paladins and Mojo Nixon—proved it was possible to have a national recording and touring presence while continuing to live in San Diego. "We stayed right here; up in L.A. they tell you what to do!" says Nixon. "You miss the L.A. parties and hanging out and stuff. And that's probably good, because we can get in plenty of trouble down here."

But even before the alternative-rock explosion that has brought unprecedented national attention to San Diego in the past two years, an increasing number of musicians of all styles began opting to live here with little or no detriment to their careers. Witness reggae-pop band Big Mountain, heartland rocker (and erstwhile "ABC In Concert" TV host) Robert Vaughn, heavenly-voiced neo-folkie Jewel Kilcher (whose debut album is due Feb. 28 on Atlantic), jazzy singer-songwriter Joy Eden Harrison (whose debut album was released Feb. 7 on Bizarre/Planet) and punk- and country-tinged folk-rockers The Rugburns (a January EP on Bizarre/Planet).

Reggae-rockers Big Mountain

"It's nice to have the proximity of Los Angeles without having to live there," says bluesy singer-writer-pianist A.J. Croce, 23, whose second album, "That's Me In The Bar," is due next month on Private Music. "San Diego is also a great place because of the number of great musicians who live here."

A partial list of this group includes such distinguished local residents as singers Frankie Laine and Patti Page, the famed Romero classical guitar family, soul legend Ike Turner (now heading a new Revue) and singer-songwriter J.J. Cale. Longtime Kingston Trio member Nick Reynolds left town upon joining the group in 1958, but has since returned, while Janet Jackson, one of the county's most famous and reclusive residents, recently put her Rancho Santa Fe estate up for sale for $3.95 million. And sitar master Ravi Shankar quietly opened an Indian-music school two years ago in northern San Diego County, where he is periodically visited by ex-Beatle George Harrison.

MOODY'S MOOD

San Diego is also home for a coterie of acclaimed jazz artists. Their ranks include saxophonists James Moody and Charles McPherson, guitarists Barney Kessel and Allan Holdsworth, and flutist Holly Hofmann—who also books the Horton Grand Hotel's Palace Bar, San Diego's only jazz club that regularly features national and international talent.

Unfortunately, most of the top jazz artists rarely perform in the city they call home. "To live here is wonderful, and there are a lot of fine musicians here, but San Diego doesn't support the arts, to be honest," says Moody, who played just one local date in 1994. "It seems as if people don't support jazz in San Diego, and the reason is because of what's being aired on these radio stations that play elevator music and call it 'jazz.'"

Malcolm Falk, talent buyer for Solana Beach's 20-year-old Belly Up Tavern club, agrees that San Diego faces challenges other markets do not—and not just for jazz. "The San

A.J. Croce will perform at NARM.

Diego music scene is constantly challenged by the San Diego lifestyle," says Falk, whose Mac Entertainment Group recently launched Ocean Aid, a series of international environmental fund-raising concerts. "The lifestyle is geared toward being outdoors, and people are typically more physically active. Hence they don't go out as much at night. I think people in L.A. pay more attention to entertainment."

TALENT-RICH PLACE

varies from erratic to very strong. The San Diego Opera celebrated its 30th anniversary in January. The 68-year-old San Diego Symphony, which will perform at the opening of the NARM convention at the San Diego Convention Center, this month releases its second all-Berlioz album for the Hong Kong-based Naxos label. The symphony's first tour of Korea and Taiwan is planned for late spring. "I think the arts in San Diego are really emergent. I guess the best word for a newcomer is 'surprising,'" says Michael Tiknis, who became the symphony's executive director in 1993 after serving in the same capacity for the Buffalo Philharmonic. "If you go to the Old Globe Theatre or the La Jolla Playhouse, or the opera or symphony or some of the smaller repertory playhouses, you're surprised that people don't know how good they are and that they still think of San Diego as a 'sunny beach town.'"

MUSICALLY PRO-ACTIVE MAYOR

One area that has built a strong momentum on its own in San Diego is the film and TV market. "The growth that we've had is phenomenal, especially in this economy," says Wally Schlotter, head of the San Diego Film Commission. "And it's nice to have a vote of confidence from the city to explore some markets that we haven't before, like the music industry."

In late 1994, San Diego Mayor Susan Golding announced the launching of the film commission's music committee, which is designed to promote San Diego as a "growing and vibrant center" for live music, recording and the making of music videos.

"I cannot picture a real city without a strong face of art and culture," Golding says. "It provides this city's ambience and soul, and makes it an exciting place to live. What is exciting about San Diego today is that we're being [nationally] recognized as a place where music is happening."

What's happening musically in America's sixth largest city is anything and everything. San Diego's diverse musical offerings are documented in such local music publications as Slamm, Step Jazz, 360°, Genetic Disorder and dozens of fanzines. And the fifth annual San Diego Music Awards, to be held Aug. 7 at Spreckels Theatre, will feature local performers vying in a record 25 categories.

A CRYPT AND A COAT

National press coverage has, since 1993, focused on such alternative-rock leaders as Rocket From The Crypt, Drive Like Jehu, Lucy's Fur Coat and aMiniature [sic]. But the popularity of Latin and acid jazz is growing steadily, thanks to such fine area artists as guitarist Jaime Valle, Afro Rumba, the Greyboy Allstars and guitarist Evan Marks (whose Verve/Forecast debut album is due in March).

Equally noteworthy are such local pop-jazz and World Beat-oriented artists as Fattburger, Hollis Gentry and soukous band Bitoto (finalists in Musician magazine's 1994 national talent competition).

Country standouts include Fastgun, Unbridled, Prairie Fire and the Savery Brothers, while the bluegrass scene boasts such nationally heralded musicians as multi-instrumentalist Dennis Caplinger and guitarist Mark Rounds.

BLUES, FOLK AND 200 COFFEEHOUSES

San Diego also has a vibrant blues scene, headed by such standouts as local patriarch Tomcat Courtney, slide guitarist Fred Heath and vocal/guitar powerhouse Billy Thompson, now working on an album project with veteran producer Skip Drinkwater.

Rapidly gaining prominence is the city's overflowing talent pool of singer-songwriters, some of whom have the potential to make a national impact. In addition to the aforementioned Jewel Kilcher and Joy Eden Harrison, this group includes Cindy Lee Berryhill (whose fourth album is due this fall on Cargo/Earth Music) and Pippi Bernstein, who has a development deal with Gold Mountain management.

"At one point around 1959, we had 13 coffeehouses in San Diego that featured live music, and we thought there couldn't possibly be more than debut album, "Morning Wood," the group's popularity has soared to the point that it regularly fills the Belly Up Tavern, the 600-capacity Solana Beach club that last year celebrated its 20th anniversary of presenting local, national and international acts.

CASBAH A MECCA

San Diego's club scene includes myriad other outlets for live music, that," recalls Lou Curtis, who produced the San Diego Folk Festival from 1967 to '87 and now produces the annual Adams Avenue Roots Festival. "At last count, there were nearly 200 coffeehouses in the county." It was at one of these java-and-music locales, the 50-capacity Inner Change in Pacific Beach, that Kilcher attracted a bevy of major label talent scouts in 1993 before signing with Atlantic. Other coffeehouses that feature singer-songwriters and acoustic musicians include Java Joe's in Ocean Beach, the Wikiup in North Park, Cafe Italia in Middletown and Zanzibar in La Jolla.

"The coffeehouse boom has gone hand in hand with the growth of the acoustic scene in this city," says Joy Eden Harrison. "The mutual support among musicians in the acoustic scene separates them from any other city in which I've lived."

The Rugburns, now a four-man band, began life as an acoustic duo playing the coffeehouse circuit. Buoyed by the local success of its 1994 from alternative-rock mecca The Casbah and the blues-dominated Blind Melons (both 200-capacity venues) to the half-as-large, all-styles-welcome A Better World and the 294-capacity Dream Street in Ocean Beach, which features metal, reggae and alternative rock.

Two of the largest San Diego clubs, both featuring national and local talent of varying styles, are the 699-seat New Bacchanal and the 470-seat Coach House San Diego. The 400-capacity Spirit in Bay Park was to San Diego's New Wave music scene in the late '70s and early '80s what The Casbah is to alternative rock now. Today, the Spirit features predominantly local rock bands.

MULTICULTURE IN BALBOA PARK

The Spirit is located close to San Diego's two most prominent all-ages music venues. SOMA Live, also in Bay Park, has a capacity of 1,500 and features local and national punk, alternative, metal and ska bands. The World

Beat Center in Middletown has an official capacity of 400, but often attracts larger crowds to hear local and international reggae, ska and African music acts. The center will this year become a dual-pronged operation when it opens a multicultural Largely abandoned and dilapidated just a decade ago, downtown San Diego is now teeming with restaurants, clubs and live-music venues that range from funky to elegant. The adjacent Croce's and Croce's Top Hat have capacities of 144 and 150 and feature mainstream jazz and R&B, respectively. Both are operated by Ingrid Croce, the since-remarried widow of folk singer Jim Croce and the mother of A.J., who cut his teeth playing jazz and blues in his mother's downtown clubs in the now-thriving Gaslamp Quarter.

Other notable Gaslamp Quarter clubs include the acid-jazz-happy Ole' Madrid (capacity: 650), the raucous alternative-rock favorite Bodie's (capacity: 160), the live-blues and canned-disco Club Fifth Avenue (capacity: 250) and Club E, an 8,000-square-foot dance club that is part of the trendy new E Street Alley complex.

CROW AND CRAY AT STREET SCENE

Each September since 1984, the Street Scene featured Buddy Guy, Robert Cray, Sheryl Crow and Richard Thompson, among some 70-plus acts.

Hagey is expanding this year's event to three days, regardless of whether plans reach fruition to stage a competing festival a month after Street Scene that would be modeled after the famed New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival.

STONES AT THE STADIUM

Although it was used only three times last year for concerts, San Diego's largest concert venue is Jack Murphy Stadium, home of the AFC champion Chargers football team and the currently inactive Padres baseball team. The 60,750-seat stadium last year hosted sold-out concerts by Pink Floyd, the Eagles and the Rolling Stones, promoted by, respectively, Avalon Attractions of Los Angeles, Barry Fey of Denver and Bill Silva Presents of San Diego, the city's largest concert promotion company.

The city's second-largest outdoor venue is the bayside SummerPops Bowl at Embarcadero Marina Park

RETURN OF THE LISTENING POST

A long-dormant fixture of '50s and '60s record-stores is back—as a highly personal in-store sampling system. Retailers swear by the posts, which one survey claims show an 85% positive sales-impact where used.

BY TRUDI MILLER
ROSENBLAUM

In the '50s, almost every record store had a listening post (or "booth," as the isolated stations were called), where customers could play a record before deciding to buy it. As the years went by, listening booths went the way of malt shops and poodle skirts. But in the past few years, they have made a huge comeback. No longer a mere record-player, today's posts are firmly rooted in '90s technology, with CD disc changers, digital sampling, computerized databases and in some cases, the ability to encode demographic information about the customer. To paraphrase a recent car commercial, this is not your father's listening post.

User-friendly Telescan unit

"Listening posts are fantastic for sales," says Bill Thom, president of the Harmony House chain, based in Troy, Mich. "In-store play has always been a great merchandising tool: artists like George Winston were absolutely launched through in-store play. But you can only play one disc at a time that way. With listening posts, customers can be introduced to a tremendous variety of music."

"There's definitely an effect on sales," agrees Jeff Clifford, VP of store operations for the Miami-based Spec's chain. "We've done tests where we've put a title on the listening post in just a few stores and seen sales of that title skyrocket, but only in those stores."

Low Garrett, VP of purchasing for Camelot Music, notes, "Customers love them. And virtually everything we've ever put on our listening post has had an increase in sales." In a recent Macey Lippman Marketing survey, 85% of retailers with listening posts noted a positive impact on sales.

CENTERS, BARS AND COMBOS

So, what kind of posts are these stores using? Answers range from a single CD player to a multi-CD setup to an i-station with 37,000 digital samples to a "listening bar" where customers can play any CD they want. Some stores work with record companies to promote developing artists on the posts; others choose featured artists independently of the labels. Some stores create their own listening centers; some sign on with firms specializing in retail listening posts (see sidebar), and many employ a combination of styles.

HMV, for example, has both i-stations and endcap listening posts in its seven U.S. stores. "The i-station enables people to listen to 80% of the product we have in stock," says Rob Goldstone, VP of marketing. "Then we have dozens of single-CD posts, each featuring a different title. There's a definite strategy to choosing the artists: it's not for sale to the record companies, it's totally up to our knowledgeable staff to select what they think people will like. We try to break a few new pieces of music every month: we wouldn't put Pearl Jam on, because people know what they sound like. It's perfect for artists people haven't heard of, or artists that haven't put anything out in several years."

As for the i-station, Goldstone says, "The great feature is that it recommends other artists. If someone listens to Bonnie Raitt, it will say, 'You might also like k.d. lang or Melissa Etheridge.' That definitely increases sales. Customers love it; there's always long lines at the i-station."

WORKING WITH LABELS

Milford, Mass.-based Strawberries also has a mixture in its 155 stores, using single- and multi-disc Telescan players and i-stations. Unlike HMV, Strawberries works with the labels to create promotions for developing artists on the listening posts.

Best Buy of Bloomington, Minn. also uses Telescan, with posts in 147 of its 204 stores. The older stores have endcap units with six CDs, the newer ones have 70 to 100 single-disc posts throughout the store. "From what we saw, [Telescan's units] were the most indestructible and reliable. We had originally built some ourselves, but they got beat up quite a bit. Telescan's are also about the easiest for the customer to use, very user-friendly," says VP of visual merchandise Greg Maunum. "We also like its portability; it's not big and bulky, so we can easily move it throughout the department."

Featured artists are chosen with a combination of label input and buyer discretion. Jeff Abrams, Best Buy VP of merchandising for entertainment software, cites Del Amitri as an example of a band that benefits from listening post exposure. "Here's a group that has two semi-successful albums, but it's the type of band that if no one hears them, there's no pent-up demand for them," Abrams says. "People don't seek them out, but they like them when they hear them."

In contrast to these chains, Budget Tapes & CDs in Missoula, Mich. is a single store with several ordinary, store-bought CD players with headsets. Customers can listen to any CD they want. Side 1 Music in Richmond, Ind. has a similar system, but with one drawback, says president Duke Ward—"If we don't get timely in-store play copies, we can't let the customer play it; we don't open shrink-wrapped retail copies."

That's not a problem in Blockbuster Music's 550 stores. "We have a sampling bar in every store where a customer can bring any CD, and we'll open it up and play it for them," says Gerald Weber, president of the music division. "The customer doesn't touch the CD. If they don't buy it, we just put it in an import bag and resticker it."

Blockbuster Music stores also have between 10 and 80 listening stations, which are preprogrammed: a "Soundcheck" station with 12 developing artists, a Top 20 wall and country, jazz and classical stations with up to five titles each. "Customers love it; I'd say close to 50% of music sampled at the posts is purchased," says Weber.

Blockbuster's posts are designed in-house. The company has also created Music Boss, an in-house database system through which customers can cross-reference titles and artists.

STORE-CUSTOMIZED POSTS

Spec's in Miami, with 59 stores, uses ECI's 10-disc posts. "They were able to turn things around very quickly,

The third-largest venue here, San Diego State University's Open Air Theatre, has been exclusively booked since 1983 by L.A.'s Avalon Attractions, which staged 12 concerts there last year, including shows by Green Day, Steve Miller and Kenny G. SDSU recently approved a contract that allows Avalon to continue exclusively booking the facility (5,122 seats with bleachers, 4,840 without) through the end of 1996.

Both Avalon and Silva are expected to pursue a contract with SDSU for booking rights to the school's soon-to-be-built 12,000-seat arena, which was recently approved by nearby homeowners, who had been litigating against its construction for the past six years. Avalon this month signed a non-exclusive contract with Arena Group 2000, the lease-holder of the 29-year-old, 15,000-capacity San Diego Sports Arena.

POP-JAZZ PREFERENCE

"Although it's a large city with a large fan-base," observes David Swift, Avalon's San Diego representative, "it's very difficult at times to gauge what the people like, with the exception of pop-jazz, which is probably stronger here than in many markets in the U.S."

The strength of pop-jazz with San Diego concert fans has helped make Humphrey's Concerts By The Bay on Shelter Island one of the most successful annual concert series in town. The 1,200-seat venue regularly hosts performances by George Benson, Al Jarreau, Manhattan Transfer and others. Humphrey's has drawn audiences of between 90,000 and 100,000 for each of the past six years.

Another venue of note is downtown's 2,255-seat Copley Symphony Hall, the indoor home of the San Diego Symphony. The nearby San Diego Concourse is home to two venues, the 2,992-seat Civic Theatre (home of the San Diego Opera) and the 4,500-seat Golden Hall, both of which are also used by outside pop promoters.

Downtown's under-used Spreckels Theatre has a capacity of 1,456, while the newly opened California Center for the Arts, Escondido, is a 12-acre, $74 million arts center housing a 1,500-seat concert hall and a 400-seat theater. And just last month, the University of California at San Diego opened its Recreation, Intramural, Athletic Complex (or RIMAC), a 5,000-seat facility that will be used for concerts and lectures as well as sporting events.

and customized it so it didn't look exactly like every other store. It looks like Spec's," says Jeff Clifford, VP of store operations. "They put our logo on it, and we were able to use our own formica fixtures with their electronics." Spec's also has a four-headphone computerized kiosk with 60-second digital samples of CDs, designed by Zencor of Pompano Beach, Fla.

Bill Thom of Harmony House (37 stores) swears by High Level Marketing's systems. "It gives the customer full access to the disc, including volume and the opportunity to skip around the tracks and go back and forth between CDs, but without access to the player itself," he says. "The hardware is very heavy-duty. It's been a great merchandising tool." Each store has an average of four posts with 12 titles each.

CHANGING CUSTOMERS' BUYING HABITS

Chris Hopson, senior VP of advertising and marketing for the 90-store Tower Records chain, based in West Sacramento, Calif. also uses High Level Marketing's system. "We like the 12-play system, the opportunity to listen to more than one disc. We like the quality and durability of their system," says Chris Hopson, senior VP of advertising and marketing. "We have anywhere from eight to 50 posts per store." Tower's developing-artists program showcases 96 titles throughout the chain, chosen jointly with the record labels; the rest of the post's titles are picked at the local store level, with the manager and buyers coordinating with the advertising staff on local promotions.

Hopson finds that rather than increasing sales, listening posts change buying habits. "A customer may come in to get one CD, but after listening to a new artist on the post, buy that CD instead," he says. "It doesn't increase our incremental sales, but it does get the customer interested in listening to new artists."

In addition to listening posts, countless stores, including Tower, use the Muze system, which is not a listening post but rather a database cross-referencing 100,000 albums. ■

Post Haste

A quick-reference guide to listening-station makers

In choosing a listening post, stores have a variety of options. Here is a rundown of firms that create listening posts for music retailers:

ECI of New Jersey offers 21 types of listening posts, ranging from single-CD to 100-CD players. The posts play full songs from the actual discs, and each has a disc and track display; the record stores decide what discs are featured, and the customer can choose which tracks to listen to. Posts are customized in different colors and sizes, with a full-color logo of the store. Prices range from $499 to $1499. Currently, ECI machines are used in about 2,500 locations, says president Bob Crozer.

High Level Marketing of Los Angeles has systems including one-CD and six-CD tabletop units, a six-title wall unit, free-standing stations with six or 12 titles, and a rack of 48 or 96 copies of the CDs that people can buy after listening. Prices range from $500 to $3,500; the most popular unit is a free-standing 12-title unit with 96 copies of the CDs, costing $2,500. Currently, several hundred stores are using High Level's product, says president Ken Rubin, including Tower Records, Harmony House, Streetside and House of Blues.

Intouch Group of San Francisco sells the i-station, a free-standing machine that offers up to five 30-second digital samples from each of 37,000 albums, plus full-color music videos and reviews. Customers can select by artist, title, new release list or Billboard charts. After the customer has heard the song, the i-station asks him or her to rate it and also suggests other similar artists the customer might enjoy. Customers need an i-card to use the system; the card gives the machine demographic data each time it is used. This data is used by Intouch and record companies to formulate marketing plans. The system is updated monthly, and stores rent the machine for about $300 a month. The i-station is currently in 200 to 300 stores, including Warehouse, Strawberries, Camelot and HMV.

Telescan of Menlo Park, Calif. has several styles ranging in price from $495 to $1795. There's a wall-mounted single-CD player the size of a long-box; a 10-CD player available in free-standing, endcap or slatwall style; chart-oriented stations that play 20-second digital samples of three songs from each of 40 or 100 top-selling albums (selected by studying data from Billboard and SoundScan and input from retailers), plus specialty and promotional titles, updated monthly for an additional $25 to $32 a month, with the machine available in free-standing, endcap or slatwall style. There's also a music-video version and an audiobook version, and a system called The Source, combining Trade Service Corp.'s Phonolog and Videolog databases with cross-referenced information on 180,000 albums and 30-second sound samples of hundreds of tracks from the top 100 albums. The Source costs $2,900 to $4,900, with monthly updates at $90. Telescan's machines are used in several thousand stores, says sales and marketing VP Michael Brachman, including Musicland, Sam Goody, Disc Jockey and Best Buy.

Muze of Brooklyn, N.Y. does not play music, but does offer a database of 100,000 albums, cross-referenced by performer, song title, key word in song title, album title or specialized category. There are 28 specialized categories including musical genre, format and record label, with each category broken into as many as 40 subsets to narrow and speed the search. Classical information is accessed by composer, conductor, ensemble, genre, soloist, label, instrument or key title-word. Muze is free-standing, needing only an electrical outlet, and can be integrated into a store's POS system to display current inventory. Stores pay $5,000 to $6,000 for the machine, plus $1,000 a year for the monthly software updates. More than 1,000 stores use Muze, including Blockbuster Music, Peaches, Tower Records, Trans World, Best Buy and Harmony House.—T. M. R

Finally, Retailers Get Smitten By "CD ROMance"

On the floor, customers try and buy. In the boardrooms, the chains gang strategizes over the right mix of titles, price and packaging.

BY STEVE TRAIMAN

What a difference a year makes—or even the last six to eight months—in the multimedia software marketplace. For CD-ROM especially, and to a lesser degree 3DO and CD-i, demand for titles is expanding at a modest pace. More important, a growing number of retail music chains and independents, and their multimedia locations, are testing the waters and finding that an increasing number of customers are shopping—and buying.

The reasons are simple. Last year, an estimated 18.4 million computer systems were sold, more than one-third with CD-ROM drives. The number of multimedia homes ranges from 12 million upward, and more families are spreading their multimedia wings every month. The interest is wide-ranging, from games and "edutainment" to interactive music and action adventure, with the new CD Video full-length movies on the not-distant horizon.

The "CD-ROMance," as some call it, is hardly epidemic, except for the wealth of titles flooding the marketplace. And it's definitely "caveat emptor" or buyer beware, as an escalating amount of consumer complaints relating to installing games, children's titles and other software has been reported by retailers and distributors. The problem is that each game or other program has its own unique demands on the computer operating system, complicated by the many variations of software and hardware in the marketplace.

Despite these "growing pains," a cross-section sampling of the industry during the January Winter CES in Las Vegas demonstrates heightened CD-ROM interest. Commentary includes Baker & Taylor (B&T) Entertainment, Ingram Entertainment, Good Times Interactive, Blockbuster Entertainment, Camelot Music, the

Sega-CD kiosk

BLENDING OF THE 5-INCH FORMAT

"What were once different formats—music, video, animation, game play—are blending into one 5-inch CD component, and it's very exciting," emphasizes Carl Mann, VP, marketing, for B&T Entertainment. He sees a developing interest in many accounts and notes that, through the recent fourth quarter and holiday season, "Our stores that gave CD-ROM decent visibility and exposure, and kept inventory in stock did very well. If the format and titles were buried in a corner, sales probably were lost." Mann sees the release of CD-ROM interactive titles by more front-line artists like Bob Dylan, who recently joined Peter Gabriel, Prince, David Bowie and others, as opening up the format to more music stores. He also sees an increasing demand for a broader range of titles, with "market penetration of hardware still the driving force, and as we grow closer to a 'critical mass,' the right mix of titles is the key." Among hits this past year, he noted Good Times' "Doom II," "Myst" and Sirius' "5-foot, 10-pack" that "combines the best of merchandising techniques with solid product." The firm's new Franklin, N.J. warehouse for Eastern U.S. distribution opened just in time for the expanded multimedia interest.

A 33% INCREASE

At Ingram Entertainment, David Balfour, multimedia manager, saw his CD-ROM accounts increase by more than 33% the last quarter, with more than 100 video accounts added to the multimedia mix. He also reported an upturn in interest from the firm's supermarket chains, with a typical CD-ROM increase dramatically last year, far beyond our expectations," he observes. "About 50% of all software sales in the fourth quarter were CD-ROM, although only 45% of about 187 SKUs (format titles) were this format. CD-ROM should increase to 55% this quarter, to 65% next quarter and up to 90% by year-end." He acknowledged a lower increase in SKUs but expects Wal-Mart to increase shelf space by mid-year.

From a publisher's standpoint, "Doom II" has been a runaway hit, the No. 1 title in most locations. "We found we were selling more CD-ROM versions than 3.5-inch floppies despite the fact that our disk version was not full multimedia enhancement. Most of our titles this year will be only CD-ROM," says Chaimowitz. He noted that the title was purchased by both Tower Records & Video and the Musieland Group for its Media Play and On Cue locations. "We'll see more and more music stores enter the CD-ROM market this year, and we anticipate working with them very closely," he emphasized.

LISTENING TO MID-AMERICA

For the Musieland Group, Paul Ramaker, division merchandise manager, hardlines and computer software, notes that Media Play had been with 3DO and CD-i from their inception, using the kiosks and demos provided by their respective manufacturers with encouraging response. With over 1,000 computer software titles in a typical location, CD-ROM expanded to at least 300 SKUs by year-end, up significantly from about 100 titles a year ago. At CES, he anticipated going through the show and seeing everything, but had a cautionary note location carrying about 50 CD-ROM titles. Since grocery stores usually don't jump in with new products, he feels they're phasing out older cartridge-game formats for the newer CD-based software. The company's larger distribution center in Kansas City, Kan., is now handling multimedia software, shifted from its former Dallas location.

For Good Times Interactive, Ron Chaimowitz, recently named president and CEO, notes his firm's unique position as a publisher of top-selling titles ("Doom II") and supplier of computer software to mass merchants Wal-Mart, Caldor and Phar-Mor, among others. "At Wal-Mart, we saw on the glut of CD-ROM titles, among others. "There's not enough shelf space for all the content, and distributors are getting hit with a lot of returns," he says. "Unless you get realistic on inventory, all you have is dead stock and a bottom-line liability."

Ramaker sees the key question "Is it really interactive?" as vital—as is the need to use industry resources for buying decisions on new titles, including advice from major labels or distributors. "As penetration in homes grows, what 'mid-America' wants to see—and do—will determine the direction of the market for CD-ROM and other new CD formats," he believes.

BLOCKBUSTER'S BULLISHNESS

"After our successful test of interactive software in about 55 Bay Area Blockbuster stores last year, we're going to expand to about 35 more in the first quarter," reports Mike van der Kieft, director of business development. "They'll be geographically dispersed to validate the results of our test, and we're determining the locations based on these profiles." The chain will continue to support MPC and Macintosh, CD-ROM, Sega CD, Panasonic 3DO and Philips CD-i formats, he says. Most important, direct mail has provided very effective feedback from Blockbuster's computerized list of PC and Mac customers.

"We're alerting them to the availability of CD-ROM and other computer software in specific locations, and they get a certain sense of 'belonging' as a Blockbuster customer."

At CES, van der Kieft's main interest was in CD-ROM and getting a reading on holiday business for hardware vendors like 3DO and CD-i, "to find out how these equipment platforms fared," as he puts it. Based on results from the new group of multimedia locations, Blockbuster will continue its rollout through '95, he says.

CD-ROM IN 90 TOWER STORES

For Tower Records & Video, "Sega CD did quite well over the holidays, including the new 32X upgrade system, and game rental has been a key factor in building sales," according to John Thrasher, VP, video purchasing and distributing. About 55 of the 90 stores were carrying mostly CD-ROM by year-end, up significantly from about 15 last June. He points to a need for more day-and-date release on all software versions of games or other programs, to take advantage of national publicity, among other factors. At CES, he planned to take a look at CD Video progress, observing that the VSDA Retail Advisory Committee was very enthused over Sony progress on a movie-length 5-inch CD. "We'll have CD-ROM in all 90 stores by the end of the first quarter," Thrasher promises, "with our buyer, Vicky

Mehring, doing an excellent job in working out the inventory mix for each location."

"We've tried limited CD-ROM titles at 30 to 40 of our 59 stores," reports David Hainline, senior VP, marketing and merchandising, for Miami-based Spec's Music. "Those related to music seem to sell well, and we've tried some children's titles as well, but it's too early yet to call it a success." The chain has started a customer database and begun tracking with questions as to what type of programs they want. "With more music-related CD-ROM, it's becoming another format in our initial run, and we're not into CD games yet," he notes. Pricing is a key concern, particularly with Spec's competition in Florida from Media Play, Sega CD that can provide immediate results, or other new product lines—anything unusual to generate more volume." His main concern is packaging—"every which-way, from a deck of playing cards to a box of Wheaties. We really need some standards to maximize store display utilization," he maintains. He does see CD video as a logical extension for Camelot, one of the biggest CD audio accounts in the country, and he hopes to get a look at both the Sony/Philips and Time Warner/Toshiba 5-inch DVD (digital video disk) movie formats. Multimedia will be integrated into the new Superstores and larger mall stores, "as you need space for an adequate presentation and to showcase inventory for your customers."

TRIAL RENTALS AND A FULL-TIME BUYER

At the 100 Hastings Books, Music & Video stores, "We got into CD-ROM in mid-'93 and went full tilt," recalls Vinnie Lo Sasso, director of purchasing. "We saw there were more and more CD-ROM drives being sold, and we also started early with Sega and Nintendo game rentals. We have Sega CD in about 20 stores, but it's been a little slow. Now we've added hardware systems, with opportunities to rent on a trial basis as well." The chain just hired its own full-time game buyer, Bill Pennington, from one of its retail outlets, to backstop Anderson

"Doom II" was one of '94's big hits.

Blockbuster, Circuit City and Best Buy, among others. "We're working with both Ingram and Baker & Taylor for purchasing power, as the key is what price you can sell CD-ROM for in the face of intensifying competition," says Hainline. "In the future, we'd possibly buy direct for better margins." At CES, his prime goal was to look at how the new multimedia formats were doing, but he does expect they'll play an increasingly important role at Spec's.

CAMELOT'S LOGICAL EXTENSION

With about 410 stores and a growing number of Camelot Music Superstores, "We're testing CD-ROM through this year," notes Lon Garrett, VP, purchasing. "There's still a learning curve with our customers, and when the 'big six' get into the format more actively, there'll be more application for retailers like us." At CES, he was looking for one or two interactive game systems, "something like Merchandisers, which purchased parent Western Merchandisers in Amarillo, Tex., last year.

With close to 200 CD-ROM SKUs at year end, the category has grown over 75% this past year, with both MPC and Macintosh platforms. Pennington notes that multimedia is very price-sensitive, with the chain doing good business on $9.99 shareware-type programs, as an example. Anderson, which had supplied Wal-Mart and Sam's Clubs prior to Good Times Interactive taking over, now handles distribution to the Hastings locations, notes purchasing director John Styron. "We take our direction from them, but we expect to service multimedia to some of our other accounts this year as well."

As Baker & Taylor's Mann observes, "All these CD-ROM titles are driving an initial interest in the marketplace. As more consumers start to enjoy the format, they're returning for more, and that's good news for all retailers." ■

Christian-related sessions.

In addition, there are several major San Diego music-production companies. The most prominent is Patterson, Walz And Fox, which created the theme music for "The CBS Evening News" and the music library for "NBC 2000," which is used daily network-wide.

In a related field, Sony recently opened a CD-ROM publishing division in San Diego, which could help fill the partial void created by the recently announced downsizing of industry leader Compton New Media Inc.

Video production companies have experienced growth, while the county's sole urban-music video show, "Hot Trax," has built a sizable cable-TV audience and has won two Billboard Music Video Awards. The local success of the show, produced by David Law and airing Friday and Saturday nights on all but one area cable service, is especially notable since San Diego's only urban-music radio station switched to an alternative-rock format last year.

"We started in 1986, and since then we've grown and built credibility," said Law, who is now seeking to air his show nationally. "There are [urban] artists from here working in L.A., and that's the problem—everyone here wants to go to L.A."

While that may be true for R&B-oriented San Diego performers, the opposite appears to be the case for many others.

"The music scene is excellent, but more and more musicians are moving down here because of the quality of life, and commuting to Los Angeles when they need to," notes former Ray Charles Orchestra trumpeter Mitch Manker, now a member of A.J. Croce's band. "If you want to raise a family and live in a neighborhood where you feel comfortable, this is the place to be. Everything else is a bonus."

Alternative Action

Hard Work And Non-Hype Characterize The Bands And Labels In A Super-Active Underground

■ BY GARY HUSTWIT

The past two years have been exciting ones for San Diego's suddenly burgeoning "alternative" music scene. Over a dozen major and independent label signings have brought the city national attention, but most local musicians seem less interested in A&R-darling status and more interested in making San Diego a consistent, music-producing city.

Several factors have contributed to the city's new-found success. The 1991 arrival of Headhunter Records, a subsidiary of Cargo Records, the Montreal-based label and distributor, marked the first time a label with truly international distribution and promotion was based in San Diego. Headhunter skimmed the cream of San Diego's musical talent unopposed, leading to the signings of Rocket From The Crypt, Drive Like Jehu, fluf, Three Mile Pilot, Creedle, Heavy Vegetable, Uncle Joe's Big 'Ol Driver, Drip Tank and a dozen others. The Casbah, a small venue started by local promoter Tim Mays, provided bands a place to perform and mingle in a city starved for good clubs. The Independent Music Seminar, now in its fourth year, gave local bands the opportunity to meet other musicians and labels from all over the country.

Among the bands recently signed to big labels, many have released albums, toured and met with positive, if moderate, results. Drive Like Jehu gained critical and commercial success with their Interscope debut, "Yank Crime." Interscope also re-released Rocket From The Crypt's second Headhunter record, "Circa: Now!," and Rocket is about to record a new full-length album, their first in over two years. aMiniature (Restless), Inch (Seed/Atlantic), Lucy's Fur Coat (Relativity) and Rust (Atlantic) have all released solid debut records for their respective labels and are all preparing second efforts. Headhunter's Three Mile Pilot was recently picked up by DGC, which has just released the band's "Chief Assassin To The Sinister."

NO "SAN DIEGO SOUND"

How have all these signings affected the bands?

"The press and the hype have tailed off, and the bands who got signed are realizing that it is not a magic ticket," says The Casbah's Mays. "They still have to work hard, even to keep their following in San Diego."

David Stampone, music writer for the weekly Reader, remarks, "I don't think that there's a pronounced difference, but the bands here are much more conscious that they have to get radio, press and tour. I don't think that it's changed the music, but then again no one has been able to come up with a pat definition of the 'San Diego sound' anyway."

MORE VENUES AND LABELS

What's San Diego's next move? While the debate rages on about what the major-label attention and media exposure will do to the city's music in the long run, a new crop of young bands and an influx of indie label start-ups are laying the foundations of a solid musical future for this town, which has historically suffered when musicians defected to nearby Los Angeles. The successful artists are now staying in San Diego, and this has inspired new bands to follow in their footsteps. There are also more original music venues than there have ever been in the city's history. The results of these influences are clearly visible in the amount of quality new music that is being produced (see sidebar).

One of the most encouraging signs of San Diego's musical growth has been the proliferation of small independent record labels. Dozens of new imprints have sprung up in the past two years, and they are releasing music not only from San Diego bands, but from artists all over the country. Labels like Goldenrod, Silver Girl, Standard, Negative, Gravity, Liquid Meat, Trademark, Poptones, Deluxe, Red Eye and Immune have joined more established indies like Scheming Intelligentsia, Vinyl Communications and Headhunter to put out records that only a few years ago would have gone unrecorded and unreleased.

"What started out as a two-label town four years ago has blossomed into too many to count," says Kevin Chanel, owner of Scheming Intelligentsia. Since 1985, Scheming has released more than 30 records, ranging from the low-fi jazz outings of Donald Wilson to the first record from aMiniature, who have since signed to Restless. "It's pretty much the same thing that happens to any town as soon as a couple bands

This is what punk-rock might sound like if it had originated in the Middle East, or outer space. Three Mile Pilot gets my vote to potentially be the most spiritually influential band to emerge from San Diego.

Another local band that should inspire other musicians through its technical virtuosity. Creedle mixes punk, jazz, anthem-rock and bird-calls into something totally unique. Retail Detail

SD's independent music-shops move fast to serve intrepid disc-hounds and unreconstructed vinyl junkies.

■ BY CHRIS MORRIS

There's no shortage of chain music outlets—Tower, Sam Goody, Wherehouse—in the San Diego area.

But the city that has become known in recent years as a hotbed of alternative musical activity is home to a number of independent retail stores that reflect the cutting-edge tastes of the town.

San Diego's best-known indigenous retail operation is undoubtedly Off The Record, which comprises two stores—a 3,200-square-foot location on Fifth Avenue in Hillcrest and an 1,800-square-foot storefront on El Cajon Blvd. near San Diego State University.

Off The Record has been in business the store has a Beatles museum and a hard-rock museum on site. Says Aberbom, "We've got all kinds of cool little doodads here—[If] we don't sell

"We're a pretty full-service store," Russell says. "We've been pigeonholed as an alternative store...We're really strong in reggae—we're one of the five or 10 strongest reggae stores on the West Coast. We're also a real strong blues store."

Russell attributes the longevity of Lou's to several factors. "We have a really good selection," he explains. "We're super-competitively priced. We're very strong with the young kids; we bring in a lot of independent stuff and 7-inch singles. We're responsive to our customers' needs, and we special-order stuff."

Keying into the collector in El Cajon

Best-known: Off The Record for 18 years. Co-owner Richard Horowitz, who runs the SDSU store (its original location), is partnered with Phil Galloway, who is in charge of the Hillcrest outlet, in business for five years.

"There's a pretty significant difference in the two stores," Horowitz says. "Our Fifth Avenue store has a huge selection of techno and dance and house vinyl 12-inches...Also, their indie 7-inch selection is phenomenal. [The SDSU store] has developed a big reputation for out-of-print LPs."

Blue Meannie Records in El Cajon also started up 18 years ago. Co-owners Alex Aberbom and Gary Shrum operate the 2,500-square-foot location.

"We key into the collector," says Aberbom, who adds that about a third of the store's sales are derived from vinyl. "There are still a lot of jukebox people out there...We've seen new vinyl hlow out like crazy. I've still got a lot of CD-holdout people [as customers]."

BIRTH OF THE USED

Blue Meannie began life principally as a used-record store, and it still does a healthy business in recycled music, as well as alternative rock, hard rock, imports and t-shirts. Working off its "Yellow Submarine"-inspired name,

From humble roots, a three-store chain: Lou's

'em, we put 'em up."

Lou Russell founded Lou's Records in February of 1980. His 4,000-square-foot Encinitas location is his third; Lou's began life as a tiny 385-square-foot operation in a Cardiff shopping center. The current shop is housed in two buildings, one containing new releases and offices, the other used records and shipping.

bands that pull from that, like Sheryl Crow," Wibe says.

Defining the ongoing appeal of indie stores in his community, Off The Record's Horowitz says, "Independent retailers are able to move much more quickly on what's going on musically, and people love it, because they're finding what they're looking for." ■

RADIO: Adventurous Programming From An Explosive "Laboratory Market"

San Diego was the market where modern rock was mass-appeal even in the years between MTV and Nirvana. It was one of the first places with jazz and hard-rock success stories. Is it something in the air?

■ BY SEAN ROSS

In the '60s and '70s, the history of radio programming was often made in places that rarely become convention host cities. One possible reason why markets like Fresno or Omaha have been such radio hot-beds throughout the years is that they had fewer competing entertainment choices in the pre-cable-days, allowing radio to take on a greater role in listeners' lives.

That being the case, San Diego is a rarity—a large market that was still sufficiently laid-back for radio to shine for the last four decades. Before L.A.'s KHJ, it was San Diego's KGB that showed that Bill Drake's "Boss Radio" worked in the big city, and it was rival KCBQ that showed that the Boss could be beaten.

More recently, San Diego was the market where modern rock was mass-appeal even in the years between MTV and Nirvana. It was one of the first places with jazz and hard-rock success stories. It was also one of the markets where the long-postulated '70s oldies format finally made the leap to reality 18 months ago.

In fact, if one sure test of any laboratory radio-market is that it has more than one outlet for the hot new formats, then it is telling that San Diego currently has two modern rockers and had, until recently, two '70s outlets.

The two modern rockers are XETRA-FM ("91X," 91.1) and XHRM ("The Flash," 92.5). 91X was one of the few early-'80s KROQ clones to survive the format's first boom/bust cycle. It did so by leaning rock, long before guitar rock became modern's predominant flavor, and throwing in occasional Who and Genesis tunes. Being so mainstream, 91X hardly seemed vulnerable on its right, but The Flash has cut into 91X with lots of the '80s music that most other modern-rock stations are jettisoning now. 91X has, according to most locals, tightened up recently, but they're still likely to be the station playing Oasis while The Flash plays "Send Me An Angel" by Real Life. 91X recently surprised the market by becoming the San Diego home of Howard Stern.

'70S ROCK AND A HARD PLACE

The two '70s-based outlets are KCLX (102.9) and, until recently, KCBQ-FM (105.3). In summer '93, when the '70s oldies format was still just something that everybody talked about, KCBQ-FM invoked its heritage as the high-energy Top 40 rocker of the early '70s for an oldies format built on '70s and early '80s pop titles. In recent months, however, it has made a transition toward classic rock, leaving the mainstream '70's to former classic-rocker KCLX, now known as "The Beach." That station recently unveiled a new lineup including market veteran Gene Knight in the afternoons.

KCLX's format change leaves KCBQ-FM pitted against KGB (101.5), the market's heritage rocker and the one-time home of the San Diego Chicken. Although most of its kin also relied heavily on classic rock in the late '80s/early '90s, KGB made the unusual move of declaring itself a classic-rock station. Recently, KGB unveiled a new morning show, its former wakeup service having defected to "Real Rock" KIOZ (102.1). "Rock

Before L.A.'s KHJ, it was San Diego's KGB that showed that Bill Drake's "Boss Radio" worked in the big city, and it was rival KCBQ that showed that the Boss could be beaten.

102" was one of the first crunchy FMs when hard rock rebounded in the early '90s. Like most of its former brethren, it has made the move away from hair bands in favor of the harder alternative outfits.

TARGETING TIJUANA

"Rock 102" is licensed to northern San Diego County and still has some signal problems through San Diego itself. KKOS (94.9), the market's adult progressive station, is also a north county license. Its signal has kept it from being a major factor in San Diego thus far, but it is reportedly planning a frequency swap that would make it more of a player. Normally, KKOS would be San Diego's most eclectic rocker, but that honor goes to XHMOR (98.9). Tijuana's "More FM" is a fascinating mix of English- and Spanish-language rock. It's not targeted at this side of the border, where English music with Spanish DJs has never really clicked, but at Mexico where that type of format is more common.

Given its proximity to the border, you'd expect San Diego to have a Spanish-language powerhouse along the lines of L.A.'s KLAX, but it doesn't. The Spanish-speaking population is smaller and, by most accounts, more assimilated. Spanish AC XLTN (104.5) and banda-leaning XHKY (99.3) both have only about two 2% of the market.

That being the case, the real Tijuana-based powerhouse is XHTZ

(90.3). With San Diego not having had an urban station per se for the last two years, "Jammin' Z90" fills both the Top 40/rhythm and urban holes for the market and is, at this writing, now No. 2 in the market. It's also one of the most musically aggressive "churban" outlets in the country. You'll hear a lot of records on Z90 that you won't hear most other places.

HOT TOP 40 AND EDGY AC

XHTZ's competition on the Top 40 side is KKLQ (106.5). A Top 40 powerhouse in the late-'80s and early-'90s, Q106 has rebounded in recent years since wresting morning stars Jeff & Jer away from KFMB-FM (100.7). Stylistically, Q106 is one of the broadest major-market Top 40s, but it's no match, in terms of variety, for KFMB-FM, now known as "Star 100.7." Like its predecessor, "B100," Star is one of those stations that obliterates the line between hot AC and adult Top 40.

If it's AC, what is "Let The Music Play" by Shannon doing there? If it's Top 40, what about those Eagles oldies? On Saturday nights, Star 100.7 plays disco oldies, as does The Beach.

It's also worth noting that San Diego's two "soft AC" stations—KYXY (96.5) and KJQY (103.7)—are also pretty edgy. KYXY, which bills itself as "soft and contemporary," is a tick harder than KJQY, which still plays an occasional Barry Manilow record, but they're both harder than what you'd expect from the format. That probably has something to do with the success of KIFM (98.1), one of the NAC format's consistent powerhouses and one of the NAC stations that leaned away from new age and toward jazz long before "Smooth Jazz" became the rallying cry for the format.

Although both soft ACs had good winter books, KJQY and KYXY are now under the same ownership, prompting speculation that one of them will change formats, either going to "male AC" or going country against long-time market leader KSON (97.3). Apart from suburban KOWF (92.1), KSON hasn't had direct competition in a decade, making it one of the few incumbent country stations that co-opted the "Today's Hot Country" position. Like most other country stations, KSON has put more oldies back in the mix recently. Unlike a lot of other country stations, they've managed to do so without sacrificing energy.

And if it's energy you want, try oldies KBZT (94.9). If KCBQ-FM signed on by harking back to its early '70s presentation—something it has since downplayed—KBZT is a jingle-for-jingle mockup of Bill Drake-era KGB. KBZT out-Drakes L.A.'s KRTH (which is no mean feat considering that Drake consults KRTH). ■ become popular."

INTERNET SURVIVAL

There has definitely been an explosion of records coming out on small labels in San Diego, but will these labels survive for long? In order to effectively market their music, many labels here are turning to the Internet, the international computer network, to make new contacts, sell records and find new talent.

Keith York, co-owner of Silver Girl Records, has found that electronic mail is the best way to conduct his label's business. "Just about every aspect of running our label has been affected by the 'Net," he explains. "I talk to radio-station music directors, DJs, writers, editors, other indies, majors, distributors, you name it." York says that Silver Girl receives about 20 e-mail messages per day; many of them are catalog requests which he simply e-mails back. "It's like free long-distance phone calling."

Never before has San Diego been so entrenched in the nation's underground-music network, and the city's bands seem destined to get more of their music and ideas out to the rest of the world. But many hope that along with increased national acceptance, the level of creativity will also continue to rise.

"The one thing I hope," the Reader's Stampone says, "is that the bands don't lose the sense of wild adventure and experimentation that making music and records really can allow for."

SIX ALTERNA-PICKS

always-creative songwriting and unique vocal arrangements have made them a band to watch, but, as with anyone who is breaking new ground, their music can be misunderstood by lazy listeners (also true for Creedle and Three Mile Pilot). Their first full-length is out now on Headhunter.

No Knife:

Straight-ahead punk with melodies that can burrow into your brain and stay in there for days. A young band with a big sound and future. A full-length record on Goldenrod is in the works.

Other Bands To Watch:

Clikitat Ikatowi, Chune, Uncle Joe's Big 'Ol Driver, Sugartwin Reverb, Loraine, Radio Wendy, Blink, Unwritten Law, Drip Tank, Rugburns, fluf, Boilermaker, Physics. —G.H. ■

POP

DAR WILLIAMS

The Honesty Room
PRODUCERS: Dar Williams, Adam Rothberg & David Seitz
Razor & Tie 2816

Featured in Music To My Ears, Jan. 28

THE JAYHAWKS

Tomorrow The Green Grass
PRODUCER: George Drakoulis
American 43006

Jayhawks' guitar-driven rock'n'roll is a shade lighter on the country tinge than on previous set (1992's "American Town Hall"), but flush with the same plaintive, high-lonesome harmonies and sharply jangling edge that make this Minneapolis band one of the country-rock brand's finest. Opening with enough hooks to land a whole, new school of fans, standouts "Blue" and "I'd Run Away" are unabashedly romantic, pop-leaning beauties. Stripped-down "Over My Shoulder" and pumped-up "Ten Little Kids," with backing vocals from Victoria Williams, are other highlights, though this set really has no lows. Even a cover of Grand Funk Railroad's "Bad Time"—honest—works in the hands of this ever more impressive band.

CAKE

Motorcade Of Generosity
PRODUCER: Cake
Capricorn 42035

Not your everyday five-piece, Cake's lineup includes a trumpet player whose sounds figure squarely into this otherwise unpeggable band and a vocalist whose relaxed singing style would never be accused of being good, but which is just great in context. The context? Call it perhaps roots rock with a twist. This Sacramento band's roots seem as firmly planted south of the border ("Comanche" and "Up So Close") as in something akin to Southern country, ("Ruby Sees All," "Pentagram," and "Jesus Wrote A Blank Check") and are all tangled up with a loose garage-band sound and alternative-leaning lyrical bent. "Jolene," which melds rock seamlessly into the picture, and hooky "Haze Of The Love" are the tunes to beat from a band that's hard to describe, but easy to listen to.

VARIOUS ARTISTS

Music From And Inspired By The Promised Land
EXECUTIVE PRODUCER: Anthony Geffen
Columbia 66969

A deeply moving, richly evocative compendium, this two-disc set complements the TV series about the massive mid-20th century migration of African-Americans from the deep South to the industrial North. The music is both vintage and newly recorded, running the gamut from 1927 recordings of Bessie Smith's "Backwater Blues" and Blind Willie Johnson's "Dark Was The Night—Cold Was The Ground" through a 1963 take on "My Home Is In The Delta" by Muddy Waters, and up to more recent recordings by hands such as Earth, Wind & Fire and Public Enemy. Powerful both in scope and impact, this is an album to live with.

THE TRAGICALLY HIP

Day For Night
PRODUCERS: Mark Howard & The Tragically Hip with Mark Vreeken
Atlantic 82729

Despite Canadian band's success on its home soil, that same degree of fervor has yet to take root across the border. Its fourth, full-length album, which topped the Canadian chart last fall in its MCA release, offers new reason to wonder, why not? Leaning heavily toward the rocking edge of its trademark country/jangle-pop/rock equation (or toppling right over, as on breakneck garage/grunge sparkler "Fire In The Hole"), the Hip sound stronger than ever and ready for wider acclaim. Even lead singer Gordon Downie's quivering vocal has

SPOTLIGHT

SLASH'S SNAKEPIT
It's Five O'Clock Somewhere
PRODUCERS: Mike Clinik & Slash
Geffen 24730

Guns N' Roses axe-slinger Slash makes an impressive solo debut at the helm of a four-piece outfit that shines as much for his guitar playing as for Eric Dover's gritty lead vocals. Material aims at a hard-rock audience, with crossover potential at album rock and even hard-leaning top 40 outlets. The grandiose first single, "Beggars & Hangers-On," is the most GN'R-inspired track on the album, reminiscent of "November Rain." Other rockers with lethal potential include the bluesy "Neither Can I," "Dime Store Rock," "Monkey Chow," and "What Do You Want To Be." Also of note is "Back And Forth Again," a power ballad that showcases Slash's softer side. A mighty debut that proves—to the possible detriment of GN'R—that Slash can cut it on his own.

settled down in a more effective, and affecting, shiver, set off deliciously in seductive "Grace, Too." Other powerhouse in a sturdy lot is "Nautical Disaster."

LITTLE AXE

The Wolf That House Built
PRODUCERS: Adrian Sherwood & Skip McDonald
OKeh/Epic 64254

Alumni of the Sugar Hill Gang and Tackhead reunite to fashion this experiment in deep grooves. Intertwining samples of Howling Wolf, Lead Belly, and other blues legends into tracks of swirling, bass-heavy, ambient dub, the Little Axe crew has created a strange, new music that does more than simply pay tribute. Though prosaic lyrics and bland singing cause the more ambitious vocal numbers to stumble slightly, the instrumentals and tracks that are sample-driven are sterling stuff. MVP goes to monster bassist Doug Wimbish, formerly of Living Colour, who reunites here with old Tackhead mates.

PETE & MAURA KENNEDY

River Of Fallen Stars
PRODUCER: Pete Kennedy
Green Linnet 2116

The Kennedys sing of "jangle poets" in the lilting, title track, and it's an apt description for this duo. Muscular acoustic guitar, affecting story-song lyrics, and Maura's pure vocal colored with darker harmonies define the broad boundaries of an alluring set. More folk-edged than folk, songs like "House On Fire," "Chelsea Embankment," and "Same Old Way" stretch cleanly into Byrdsian pop territory, while "Spirit Compass" adds a Celtic flair.

JAZZ

CYRUS CHESTNUT

The Dark Before The Dawn
PRODUCER: Yves Beauvais
Atlantic Jazz 82719

Newest release from young piano savant Cyrus Chestnut is a solid, enjoyable, traditional trio set—the perfect follow-up to his auspicious 1994 debut. Best of

SPOTLIGHT

CINDY MORGAN
Under The Waterfall
PRODUCER: Mark Hammond
Word 7019444504/601

Since receiving the best new artist accolade from the Gospel Music Assn. in 1993, Cindy Morgan has become one of Christian music's leading ladies, and this, her third Word release, amply demonstrates why. She has a warm, evocative voice capable of delivering energetic dance pop, midtempo romps, and tender ballads with equal aplomb. She's also a gifted songwriter, as evidenced by the beautiful ballad "Last Days." Other outstanding cuts include "Painted A Rainbow," "Golden Rain," "Reaching With His Love," and "I Know You." All in all, "Under The Waterfall" is a mature, satisfying project from one of the genre's brightest talents.

Chestnut's compositions include the bright, bluesy "Call Me Later," the entertaining, Bach-based "Baroque Impressions," the snappy, uptempo "Kattin," and the heavily modal "Steps Of Trane," a stepchild of Coltrane's "Giant Steps." His solo-piano passages are reserved for cover material: the classic gospel theme "Is It Well (With My Soul)" and a stark, dramatic "My Funny Valentine."

KEVIN EUBANKS

Spiritalk 2, Revelations
PRODUCER: Kevin Eubanks
Blue Note 30132

This sharp new release from Kevin Eubanks should stir more interest in the exciting young guitarist (and reluctant TV heartthrob), whose profile is further heightened by Branford Marsalis' "Tonight Show" hiatus. Sharing the spotlight with brother Robin on trombone and flautist Kent Jordan, Eubanks flies highest with the smart, funky strains of "Faith," the sinuous sweetness of "Like The Wind," the light, lovely melody of "Whispers Of Life," and the gentle beauty of "Passing," which

SPOTLIGHT

ALEX CHILTON
A Man Called Destruction
PRODUCER: Alex Chilton
Ardent 1507

America's favorite underground idol is still at it, almost 30 years after scoring with the Box Tops. New album is a sort of homecoming, as it revives the long-dormant, Memphis-based Ardent imprint (launched by Chilton's seminal outfit, Big Star). As always, Chilton shows his mastery of song form, most lucidly on "Devil Girl" and instrumentals "Bopexity" and "It's Your Funeral"—the latter a New Orleans-styled funeral march. The artist demonstrates equal flair for selecting covers, highlights being Jimmy Reed's "You Don't Have To Go"; "Il Ribelle," a spirited Italian rockabilly tune; and Brian Wilson's "New Girl In School," which is given the full Beach Boys treatment. A big, luminescent star in a dark sky.

features the shimmering, simultaneous solos of the Eubanks brothers and Jordan. Eubanks goes solo-acoustic on neoclassical themes "Earth" and (with flute accompaniment) "Moon."

JOE LOVANO

Rush Hour
PRODUCERS: Joe Lovano & Gunther Schuller
Blue Note 29269

There's something for everyone on tenor master Joe Lovano's much-anticipated date with composer/conductor/arranger Gunther Schuller, who is a veteran of many "serious-music-meets-jazz" collaborations. Lovano's brilliant reedsmanship can be nestled in warm strings on "Angel Eyes" and Ellington's "Prelude To A Kiss," or blown out in front of an augmented big band on Mingus' "Peggy's Blue Skylight," Monk's "Crepuscule With Nellie," and Schuller's manic, megabop "Rush Hour On 23rd Street." The set also includes a smaller ensemble on Ornette Coleman's "Kathline

VITAL REISSUES™

Chess Rhythm & Roll
COMPILATION PRODUCER: Andy McKaie
MCA/Chess 9352

One of the pre-eminent independent labels of all time, Chess Records ruled the Chicago blues, R&B, and rock'n'roll circuit in the '50s and '60s, issuing landmark sides by such trailblazers as Chuck Berry, Jackie Brenston, Bo Diddley, Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, and Etta James. Four-disc set distills that period into a jukebox-ready hit collection—"Rocket 88," "Sincerely," "Maybellene," "See You Later Alligator," etc. Reissue specialist Andy McKaie does a typically superb job unearthing rare and previously unavailable gems by the likes of the Four Tops, the Moonglows, and Paul Gayten, creating a product that suits collectors and initiates alike.

THE COMMODORES

The Best Of The Commodores
COMPILATION PRODUCER: Al Quagliere
Motown 31453-0358

Quintessential '70s funk machine produced a series of smash singles and albums before fading from the spotlight after lead singer Lionel Richie's departure in 1982. Among them are such funk/disco masterpieces as "Brick House" and "Machine Gun," as well as tender ballads like "Easy" and "Three Times A Lady"—which foreshadowed Richie's later success as a romantic balladeer. Two-disc anthology culls those and other hits from the Motown years (1972-1985). Although the Commodores still record and perform, their glory days are behind them and gloriously captured on this set.

Gray," two Lovano duets with soprano vocalist Judi Silvano, and solo sax on Strayhorn's "Chelsea Bridge."

ANDREA MARCELLI

Oneness
PRODUCER: Andrea Marcelli
Lipstick 89018

Drummer/clarinetist Andrea Marcelli also serves as composer, arranger, and producer on this synth-soaked contemporary jazz foray awash in atmospheric riffing. With a memorable crew that includes Mike Mainieri, Ralph Towner, Allan Holdsworth, Chuck Loeb, and Mitchel Forman, highlights include the wild soloing on "You Have To Wait," the bright, bouncy ambience of "Song For You," and the clarinet/percussion fantasia of "The Dance Of The Soul." The lovely clarinet/piano duet of "Clouds" is further sweetened by Towner's fleet-fingered fretwork.

LATIN

★ PUERTO RICAN POWER

El De Mas Poder . . .
M.P. 6144

3 X (TRES EQUIOS)

Atrevete
PRODUCER: Kenny Reyes
Soho Latino/Sony 81484

Solid label premiere by versatile Nuyorican rap trio grafts lighthearted verses of male bravado onto a smorgasbord of dancehall, house, merengue, and jungleified grooves. PDs on the East Coast and Puerto Rico will find room for "Mueve Esa Cosa," "Martillo," and "Aprovecha."

COUNTRY

TRISHA YEARWOOD

Thinkin' About You
PRODUCER: Garth Fundis, Harry Stinson
MCA 11201

Once again, for her fourth album, young star Trisha Yearwood and producer Garth Fundis have managed to unearth an exceptional bunch of ballads. Gretchen Peters' "On A Bus To St. Cloud" and Kim Richey's "Those Words We Said" are the kind of high-drama ballads this singer can really wrap her formidable vocal cords around. As usual, however, when the tempo picks up, as it does on the Waylon-ish "The Restless Kind," Yearwood tends to lose her footing. As good a singer as she is, Yearwood gets lost when the smoke gets too thick.

CLASSICAL

★ BILL FRISELL

Go West
PRODUCER: Lee Townsend
Elektra Nonesuch 79350

With this set of music for the classic Buster Keaton film "Go West," Bill Frisell has crafted one of his finest, most evocative albums. Evincing his best qualities as both guitarist and composer, he harvests melancholy Americana from deceptively modest, episodic themes. Coloring the scenes with acoustic as well as his trademark electric, Frisell produces strangely cinematic motifs on guitar, and his rhythm cohorts—longtime bassist Kermit Driscoll and drummer Joey Baron—provide abundant narrative drive. Superior as stand-alone listening, "Go West" is joined by the more programmatic "High Sign/One Week," another Keaton soundtrack album by Frisell out simultaneously via Elektra Nonesuch.

POP

► TLC Red Light Special (4-40)

PRODUCER: Babyface
WRITER: Babyface
PUBLISHERS: ECAF/Sony Songs, BMI
LaFace 4097 (c/o BMG) (cassette single)

Babyface-helmed follow-up to the trio's massive "Creep" is a slow'n'slinky R&B ballad that merges the producer's trademark lush romance with the streetwise sass that has framed the act's biggest hits—which is no small feat. Direct lyrics are voiced with a youthful vigor amid sheets of caressing synth lines and fluid, funk guitar riffs. Factor in an instantly memorable, sing-along chorus, and you have the ingredients of a sure-fire, airwave-saturating hit.

► ANNIE LENNOX No More I Love You's (4:50)

PRODUCER: Stephen Lipson
WRITERS: D. Freeman, J. Hughes
PUBLISHERS: Anxious/Careers-BMG, BMI
Arista 2804 (c/o BMG) (cassette single)

It has been roughly three years since Lennox graced the world with her incomparable voice. On this peek into her upcoming "Medusa" opus, she picks up right where she left off floating fluttering phrases over a sea of atmospheric synths and strings that are propelled by a subtle, shuffling beat. Track builds to a dramatic musical climax that perfectly suits the declarative tone of the lyrics. Single successfully fits into the mold of current trends, while also providing a refreshing respite from the same old thing. It's a smash.

★ DIGABLE PLANETS Dial 7 (3:58)

PRODUCER: not listed

PUBLISHER: not listed
Pendulum 14323 (c/o Cema) (cassette single)

Unique hip-hop trio delivers a smooth and clever funk jam that is armed with a wicked hook that sticks to the brain upon impact. Merging an easy-going, sing-along chorus with well-measured rhymes, track also will appeal to listeners who want more than jock-grabbing prose in their hip-hop. Will kick best at peak volume over top 40 airwaves.

95 SOUTH Rodeo (4:36)

PRODUCER: Bass Mechanics
WRITERS: Da S.W.A.T. Team
PUBLISHERS: Downlow Quad/Drop Science, BMI Rip-It 9502 (CD single)

95 South is on a roll. The Miami bass duo is clearly emerging as the leader of chant-rap anthems. The act's latest single contains the now-mandatory abundance of booty-bumpin' beats and hyper-driven bass drops, but also plenty of high-pitched, hoarse squeals and funky foot stompin'. Country bass, anyone?

SHEENA EASTON My Cherie (4:02)

PRODUCER: Denny Diante
WRITERS: A. Armato, W. Wellman
PUBLISHER: not listed
MCA 3309 (c/o Uni) (cassette single)

Easton previews her forthcoming album of the same name with a swinging ballad that sways with lush, retro-R&B rhythms. Easton's voice sounds as strong as ever, and producer Denny Diante surrounds her with brass horns and swirling backing vocals. In all, it's a solid contender for top 40, AC, and urban-level play.

JIMMY CLIFF FEATURING LEBO M Hakuna Matata (3:50)

PRODUCERS: Jay Rifkin, Fabian Cooke, Mark Mancina
WRITERS: T. Rice, E. John
PUBLISHER: Wonderland, BMI
Walt Disney 09800 (cassette single)

An Elton John tune from "The Lion King" is refashioned for the Walt Disney Records album, "Rhythm Of The Pride Lands"—which consists of material culled from, and inspired by, the hit film. Cliff's pop-framed reggae style anchors the infectious, toe-tapping track, which sounds primed for immediate multiformat airplay.

EVIDANCE Tell Me O.J. (3:30)

PRODUCER: not listed
WRITERS: R. Audet, K. McKenna
PUBLISHER: Key In Lock, SOCAN
Flex 001 (CD single)

It is a small wonder that there have not been more singles exploring the media-saturating

O.J. Simpson trial. This funk/hip-hop novelty item—written and recorded by a prison guard, no less—takes the ex-football player's side, asking for understanding while laying out the details of his life. Single is well-produced and is waiting to be plucked for top 40 play.

R & B

VBYE Take It To The Front (3:49)

PRODUCERS: Somethin' For The People
WRITERS: W.J. Young, R. Holiday, C. Wilson
PUBLISHER: Junkie Funk, BMI Island 6922 (cassette single)

Does urban radio need another troupe of harmonizing females? Not unless they serve the kind of attitude and energy this charismatic act does. Cushioned backing vocals support a solid lead performance that works well against the track's clicking hip-hop beat. Deserves a close listen from R&B and pop radio programmers.

HOWARD HEWETT I Wanna Know You (4:18)

PRODUCERS: Monty Seward, Howard Hewett
WRITER: M. Seward
PUBLISHER: Dacara, ASCAP Caliber 2012 (CD single)

Hewett deserves far more radio attention than he has been getting in recent days. The tide could easily turn with the onset of this grandly produced R&B ballad, which balances a reliably strong and oh-so-soulful vocal with slick, jazzy keyboards and light acoustic strumming. Icing on the cake is a chorus that is as catchy as it is romantic. Listen closely.

COUNTRY

► BROOKS & DUNN Little Miss Honky Tonk (3:00)

PRODUCERS: Scott Hendricks, Don Cook
WRITER: R. Dunn
PUBLISHERS: Sony Tree/Showbilly, BMI
Arista 2790 (c/o BMG) (7-inch single)

One of country's premier duos kicks the jam on this ode to a barroom queen. Not only is this a nice taste of B&D's rockier side, but it appears to include the first use of the term "buckle bunny" in a country song.

NEW & NOTEWORTHY

BLESSID UNION OF SOULS I Believe (3:45)

PRODUCER: Emosia
WRITERS: E. Sloan, J. Pence, Emosia
PUBLISHERS: EMI/Tosha/Shapiro Bernstein, ASCAP
EMI 19957 (c/o Cema) (cassette single)

This is an uplifting ballad about interracial love that should be heard for its keen musical texture, as well as its positive lyrical message. An encumbered vocal dives deep into the depths of racial hate, boldly voicing the triumph of love over ignorance. Serene piano strokes and sweeping synthesizer stabs form opulent orchestration, which attacks the serious theme with a conquering musical spirit. An outstanding track destined for widespread success.

PHARAO I Show You Secrets (4:15)

PRODUCER: DJ Stevie Steve, Alexander Hawking
WRITERS: DJ Stevie Steve, A. Hawking, M.D. Thomas, Tomcat
PUBLISHER: not listed
Columbia 6867 (c/o Sony) (cassette single)

German pop/dance smash already has begun to earn heavy play from top 40 and rhythm-crossover radio stations in Chicago and Los Angeles. Pairing of lovely Indian singer Kyra Pharaoh and rapper Dean Thomas sparks with chemistry. She flutters over a frenetic pop/rave groove with an angelic quality, while Thomas' guttural rhymes are a fine anchor to the track's glossy synths. Given pop radio's ongoing interest in bouncy dance ditties from acts like Corona and Real McCoy, this single looks like a shoo-in for sizable success.

► MARTINA MCBRIDE Where I Used To Have A Heart (3:50)

PRODUCERS: Paul Worley, Ed Seay, Martina McBride
WRITER: C. Bickhardt
PUBLISHERS: Hayes Street/Craig Bickhardt, ASCAP
RCA 62948 (c/o BMG) (7-inch single)

McBride's soaring voice takes center stage on this heartbreak ballad, thanks to a tastefully sparse, acoustic arrangement. And everything here, from the song to McBride's phrasing, is remarkably reminiscent of Bonnie Raitt's earlier work.

► DOUG STONE Faith In Me, Faith In You (3:22)

PRODUCERS: James Stroud, Doug Stone
WRITERS: D. Loggins, T. Bruce
PUBLISHERS: WB/Big Tractor/Avalon Way, ASCAP
Columbia 77837 (c/o Sony) (7-inch single)

Here's another song of inspiration from a singer who does 'em better than most. Things start out on the quiet side until a full blown choir kicks in to give this single a real evangelical fervor.

► TRACY BYRD The Keeper Of The Stars (4:15)

PRODUCER: Tony Brown
WRITERS: D. Lee, D. Mayo, K. Staley
PUBLISHERS: Songs Of Polygram International/Pal Time/
New Haven/Pulpit, BMI
MCA 54988 (c/o Uni) (7-inch single)

Byrd tips his Stetson to that big Trail Boss in the sky on this good 'ol fashioned ballad. It is a simple sentiment, and Byrd's heart-in-hand sincerity is just what this pledge of love needs to put it over the top.

JEFF CARSON Yeah Buddy (2:27)

PRODUCER: Chuck Howard
WRITERS: M. Sanders, B. Regan
PUBLISHERS: MCA/AMR/Sierra Home, ASCAP
Curb 1111 (7-inch single)

It is getting mighty crowded on those country airwaves—but look out, here comes another good 'ol boy. A fine singer and a slick-and-rowdy country production are overshadowed here by an utterly forgettable song.

DANCE

PRODUCER: Charles Dockins
WRITERS: Giant, L. Neal, M. Watford, E. Perez, M. Cameron PUBLISHERS: Smackin'/MCA, BMI, Tan, ASCAP
REMIXER: Charles Dockins
EastWest 9136 (12-inch single)

EastWest plumbs through Watford's 1993 eponymous debut and pulls out this roof-raising house anthem. Producer Charles Dockins keeps the groove firm and fast, while packing the arrangement with lots of ear-catching keyboard effects and percussion breaks. Watford's performance is playful and romantic, bouncing comfortably off a rousing, gospel-spiced clique of backing singers. Several fresh mixes will keep club DJs on point, while the edit is tight enough to make radio crossover plausible.

HARRY BEAR FEATURING TANIA MCCRAY Like A Woman (no timing listed)

PRODUCER: Harry Bear
WRITER: H. Bear
PUBLISHER: Dream Research, BMI
T&A 0001 (12-inch single)

Up-and-coming producer Bear displays solid potential for major club success with this pop/house mover. He coats a muscular bassline with energetic percussion rolls and the kind of melody that mainstream DJs regularly program. Singer Tania McCray brings a sultry, star-powered tone to song, adding to its overall accessibility. Contact: 305-761-3549.

2 IN A ROOM Ahora! (Now!) (6:47)

PRODUCERS: Danny "Holiday" Vargas, Victor Vargas
WRITERS: D. Vargas, V. Vargas, R. Vargas, E. Ovalles
PUBLISHER: Dose Rock/60 Watts/Cutting, ASCAP, Kiss Conn/Castle Boy/It's Time, BMI
REMIXERS: Danny "Holiday" Vargas, Victor Vargas Cutting 332 (CD single)

It has been a hot second since "Wiggle It" set the world on fire, but this stomping Latin/hip-house anthem could meet with similar success. The track skittles with an organ-grinding pop/house groove, while the Wepa Man chants and raps in both Spanish and English. A variety of mixes smoke and are dandy for club and crossover radio programming. Contact: 212-567-4900.

AC

► JANN ARDEN Could I Be Your Girl (4:33)

PRODUCER: Ed Cherney, Jann Arden
WRITER: J.A. Richards
PUBLISHERS: PolyGram Songs/Girl On The Moon, BMI
A&M 8396 (c/o PGD) (CD single)

Arden already has enjoyed much-deserved success in her native Canada with this and several other songs from her fine "Living Under June" collection. Working with a crisply produced arrangement that is chock full of accessible shuffle beats, Arden weaves literate prose and the kind of brain-sticking chorus that demands repeated radio spins. Single should start building an audience at AC radio, where smarter music is often embraced quickly; top 40 approval could follow shortly thereafter.

★ THE WORKS Andrew (no timing listed)

PRODUCER: Steven Plump
WRITER: G. Hendrickson
PUBLISHER: J. Galt
Neat 02 (cassette single)

Intriguing new act offers a strong, introspective pop ballad that is occasionally reminiscent of Joshua Kadison's "Jesse." Composer George Hendrickson displays a solid ear for enduring melodies and touching prose, which the band (along with producer Steven Plump) executes to fine effect. Single would provide a lovely interlude to any AC playlist it graces. Contact: 914-856-3252.

TRAMAINE HAWKINS Who's Gonna Carry You (no timing listed)

PRODUCERS: Eve Nelson, Marty Paich, David Paich
WRITERS: E. Nelson, D. Scanlon
PUBLISHERS: Zomba Enterprises/PSO, BMI
Columbia 6793 (c/o Sony) (CD promo)

Hawkins has long been a source of wonderfully crafted inspirational music, and this single from her Columbia set "To A Higher Place" more than delivers. The difference between this track and her previous material lies in the glossy pop tone of the arrangement—which clearly positions the artist for potential mainstream crossover. Hawkins' intense and moving style keeps things from getting too mucky, and the track builds to a thoroughly satisfying conclusion.

ROCK TRACKS

► BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN Murder Incorporated (4:33)

PRODUCERS: Bruce Springsteen, Jon Landau, Chuck Plotkin, Steve Van Zandt
WRITER: B. Springsteen
PUBLISHER: Bruce Springsteen, ASCAP
Columbia 6947 (c/o Sony) (CD promo)

Lyrical compelling rocker is one of several new tunes recorded with the E Street Band for the Boss' upcoming greatest hits package. Concertgoers will recognize this cut from the set list of his most recent tour. The chemistry between Springsteen and his longtime cohorts is intact—so much so that you will be wishing for a permanent reunion. At this point, this edgy, guitar-driven jam will not be available as a commercial single, though it appears likely that several formats beyond the targeted album rock radio will be pounding this one within seconds.

► SIOUXSIE & THE BANSHEES O Baby (3:19)

PRODUCER: John Cale
WRITER: not listed
PUBLISHER: not listed
Geffen 4708 (cassette single)

Siouxsie returns in good form, surrounded by a spinning atmosphere of slanted beats, go-go guitars, and careening keyboards. Produced by John Cale, this track shows the band continuing its evolution toward more radio-friendly pop material. The pioneering modern rock act could see a second top 40 breakthrough, as a new generation of listeners have not yet discovered the band.

★ JEFF BUCKLEY Last Goodbye (4:16)

PRODUCER: Andy Wallace
WRITER: J. Buckley
PUBLISHERS: Sony Songs/El Viejito, BMI
Columbia 6844 (c/o Sony) (CD promo)

This is a stunning union of provocative rock and carnal orchestration. A swirling, sonic atmosphere is shaped by Buckley's quavering delivery, which could probably court a dead tree. It is a potent brew of sensual, thought-provoking soul that deserves a chance of pop success following its run at rock radio.

MARILYN MANSON Lunchbox (4:31)

WRITERS: Manson, Berkowitz, Gein
PUBLISHER: Dinger & Ollie/Beat Up Your Mom, BMI
Onward, PRS
Nothing/Interscope 95806 (CD single)

Ever thought of using your lunch box as a deadly weapon? Marilyn Manson has and even recorded a song about it. With foul-mouthed lyrics and an abundance of screechy guitar feedback, modern rock radio may have to pass unless an adequate edit surfaces. The bonus cut, a cover of Gary Numan's 1979 track "Down In The Park" is better. Produced by Trent Reznor, it contains an eerie sample from John Carpenter's cult film "Prince Of Darkness."

GRANT MCLENNAN Simone & Perry (4:07)

PRODUCER: John Keane
WRITER: G. McLennan
PUBLISHER: Incomplete, BMI
Beggars Banquet 6036 (c/o Atlantic) (cassette single)

The former Go-Betweens singer continues with his earthy solo explorations. Though there is no new musical ground broken here, the accomplished guitar work and unpretentious vocal delivery is harmless enough. At the very least, this rootsy effort should establish McLennan as a musician's musician.

RAP

KING TEE Way Out There (4:35)

PRODUCER: Da' Mic Profesa
WRITERS: Da' Mic Profesa, King Tee
PUBLISHERS: MCA/Rhythm Jazz/Dope Deal
MCA 3258 (c/o Uni) (12-inch single)

King Tee sounds like he is lost in space in this drafty, scant rap. The atmosphere is spare, as an uncertain tempo ticks slowly through experimental sounds, including elements of jazz and a laid-back, almost sinister style that even Snoop Doggy Dogg would approve of. The prowling rap lurks in its own piano-looped universe, with no hint of its ultimate destination. This trip is the real deal.

SKEETA RANX I Like (4:08)

PRODUCERS: Bobby "La" La Serra, Edmond "Fingers" Jones Jr.
WRITERS: E. Jones, B. La Serra, R. McCoy
PUBLISHERS: B. La Tunes/Misam, ASCAP
Weeded/Nervous 20123 (12-inch single)

Hip-hop/reggae artist Skeeta Ranx flexes and stretches his vocal prowls over a hyperkinetic beat that should keep clubgoers jumpin'. Effortless vocals by Tanya Nash add a melodic balance to Ranx's choppy vocal pounce. The swift speed is dizzying, but true fans of the genre will like the deliberate disorientation.

MATLOCK Nice We Nice (3:57)

PRODUCERS: Henry K. Dr. Marshall, One Up Crew
WRITERS: Matlock, Henry K. Dr. Marshall
PUBLISHERS: 310 Worlds/Pow Wow, ASCAP
Pow Wow 500 (12-inch single)

Do not confuse this Matlock with the television character, played by Mr. Andy Griffith. While this Matlock makes music that is clearly murderous, he does not solve actual crimes. However, the sprinting pulse on this track does assault a faltering bassline with intense Caribbean-flavored beats. Is that a crime? Only if you do not investigate it.

How Stone Roses' Producer Brought Album To Blossom

■ BY ZENON SCHOEPE

LONDON—For producer Simon Dawson, 15 years of experience was distilled into one mammoth project when he stepped into the producer's shoes for the majority of the latest Stone Roses album, "Second Coming," on Geffen Records.

Released a good five years after the band's debut—a delay due in part to a protracted contractual dispute—"Second Coming" was 14 months in the making and was by no means drama-free. Original producer John Leckie was succeeded by Paul Schroeder, who then had to leave due to other production commitments. Dawson, who had been engineering the project at Rockfield Studios in Monmouth, Wales, was asked to take over.

In order to bring the record to fruition, Dawson drew on his apprenticeship as a live sound engineer with such acts as UB40, King Sunny Ade, Ozzy Osbourne, and the Stranglers—which suited the Stone Roses' live approach—as well as on his experience with producers like Pat Moran, Andy Partridge, and Steve Lipson.

"Despite the amount of time taken, I never got bored," says Dawson, adding that the Roses are "very experimental and exciting people to work with."

Part of the appeal for Dawson centered on the band's overwhelming desire to jam, and although most songs were written before the Roses arrived in Rockfield, ideas continued to flow thick and fast over the 14-month residency, with Dawson on keyboards.

"On one occasion, we jammed for three hours solid on a straight blues, and it's all on DAT, and it sounds brilliant," he says.

To capture the spontaneity of the sessions, Dawson arranged the band for live recording in a way that remained virtually unchanged for the duration of the project: drummer Reni's kit in the liveliest part of Studio

DAWSON

2 and the corridor beside it used as ambience; screened-off guitar and bass amplification for John Squire and Mani, respectively; and singer Ian

Brown in the vocal booth with his own collection of Groove Tube tube mics.

"We tried to keep everything up on the desk all the time so we could simply drop back to whatever we wanted to do," says Dawson. "Overdubs did come into it, but one of the reasons why the album is so diverse is that some of the songs were very live—'Daybreak' has only two little overdubs."

Recording was done on 48-track analog SM 996 tape through Studio 2's Neve VR console with Flying Faders. "I like to keep everything that I possibly can, like all vocal and guitar performances, and use the automatic to comp things so we're building the mix as we record," says Dawson. Also, "vital" EQ settings were stored in the desk recall bank for essential loops.

"It was important that when Bill Price came to do the mix, a lot of the settings and cuts were there for him to start working with," says Dawson, who adds he was pleased to leave the mixing to someone else.

"By that time, I was really close to the whole thing, and I liked the idea of somebody with really good ears coming in and turning it into a record," he says.

Studio Morin Heights Reaches Far Quebec Facility Embraces Int'l, Local Acts

■ BY PAUL VERNA

When the proprietors of the world-renowned Studio Morin Heights needed more space, they went into the Far Side.

At least, that's how studio manager Judy Smith describes the facility's expansion into an area that once was used as a video shooting studio. Dubbed the Far Side because of its location at the end of a long corridor adjoining the main building, the new studio has pumped new life into the 20-year-old Quebec recording mecca, once home to such superstars as the Bee Gees, Bryan Adams, Cat Stevens, Celine Dion, Keith Richards, Michael Bolton, Rod Stewart, the Police, and Rush.

Primarily, the Far Side has afforded local artists with modest budgets the opportunity to work in a studio known for churning out world-class hits. Equipped with an Otari RADAR 24-track hard-disk recorder, the Far Side is technologically advanced, yet financially affordable. The day rate is approximately $700, or less than half of the rate for the main room, which is equipped with SSL and Neve consoles.

Consequently, such up-and-coming acts as D*A*D (formerly Disneyland After Dark), Beau Domage, and the Fuel Dogs have recorded at the Far Side since it opened late last fall. The Fuel Dogs are a local act that financed their own project.

"That's a really good example of how they were able to—with their own financing—put an album together," says Smith of the Fuel Dogs. "We definitely see that as the wave of the future. They just illustrated it."

Smith says that Studio Morin Heights has witnessed the industry's shift from three-month lockouts and seemingly infinite budgets to shorter projects with limited funding.

"I think we'd be able to survive without it, but it opens us up into a market that we've never had before: the middle-budget zone," says Smith of the Far Side. "It definitely enhances us and gives us much more flexibility."

Studio Morin Heights was founded 20 years ago as Le Studio by Montreal entrepreneur André Perry, who had gained notoriety when he recorded the John Lennon sit-in that yielded "Give Peace A Chance."

When Perry decided to move his four-track setup away from Montreal in the fall of 1974, Morin Heights was an obvious choice, since he already owned a lake in the area. Thus, Le Studio became one of the first residential recording facilities in the world.

After Perry retired in the early '90s, Studio Morin Heights changed hands briefly before being acquired two years ago by L'Equipe Spectra, an entertainment concern that manages local artists like Beau Domage, Michele Rivard, Paul Piché, and Jim Corcoran; owns such prominent local venues as the Spectrum and the Olympia; and sponsors the Montreal Jazz Festival.

"Historically, our clients have wanted to be isolated," says Smith. "They wanted to do their own thing; they didn't want to be bothered with anybody. They wanted to be in their own space and have control over it."

That's still true today, adds Smith. Groups like Rush continue

Who will be next?

It's a documented fact that the Alesis ADAT® Digital Recording System has played a pivotal role in a huge number of chart successes over the past twelve months. In fact, we count seven titles that have hit number one on various Billboard charts!

#	CHART
1	DANCE/CLUB
1	DANCE/12" SALES
1	R&B

While all this success could go to our heads, we take a more modest approach toward our own promotions. After all, we don't do endorsements, so it's not like we give this stuff away. And we don't sell direct to the artist. Alesis utilizes an exclusive dealer network that continually provides the professional support you need to stay focused on making hit music.

Many people ask us, "Can you tell me who uses ADAT to make their records? I'm sure you have a list." In fact, you read about these artists every day in major musical publications. Our decision not to do traditional endorsements keeps our pricing at an always affordable level for everyone.

We'd really love to know "Who will be next?". We know it's inevitable that the next ADAT hit is just around the corner. We invite you to write, call or e-mail Alesis and let us know about your ADAT story. We can offer you exposure via the Alesis First Reflection, our company publication, which is distributed to over a quarter-million musicians and dedicated fans of our technology! They'd love to hear about your current projects.

Thousands of professionals have made ADAT their choice for digital multitrack recording and mastering.

Following price hikes by 3M last fall in its analog and digital tape products, BASF and Fuji have just announced similar increments (Billboard, Nov. 5, 1994). BASF is raising the price of its mastering and bulk duplicating analog tapes by as much as 8%, effective March 1, says director of sales and marketing Terence O'Kelly. Fuji Photo Film U.S.A., meanwhile, is raising the prices of all its VHS videotape products manufactured and marketed in the U.S.; increases range from 5% to 7.5%, according to a company statement.

Anything Seems Possible, As Labels Choose National Distributors, Regional Specialists, Doing It Themselves, Taking On Others—Or Any Combination

BY ED CHRISTMAN

Although regional distribution barriers continue to be broken down, the trend toward exclusive national distribution is winding a crooked road as market forces continue to pull the independent label and distribution sector in many different directions.

Up until 18 months ago, independent labels largely were thumbing their noses at the prospect of national distribution, a concept that was mainly getting lip service solely from distributors. But in the last year, more labels are moving away from regional distribution to sign exclusive national deals.

Even as some labels head in that direction, however, other labels are moving to sell directly to major accounts, assigning distributors to handle the smaller accounts. That strategy has been decried by some distribution executives as skimming the cream off the top and leaving crumbs on the table.

Further, two of the independent labels that eschewed independent distribution altogether and sold directly to accounts, are now touting their capabilities as distributing labels in an attempt to sign on other labels. A third independent label is proposing that its distribution arm can form the basis for a jointly owned distribution company and is seeking to lure other labels to the idea.

Still other independent labels that specialize in punk music have recently tasted success, following in the footsteps of Epitaph Records. These new labels, mainly California-based, use a number of distributors, who can sell wherever they want, without regard for territories or assigned accounts.

GOING NATIONAL

Although it took a while to ignite, observers agree that national distribution has quickly become a force in the indie sector. Johnny Philips, VP at Select-O-Hits, says, "I don't quite understand it, but the turnaround that a lot of the labels have taken in the last year is unbelievable."

Another distribution executive with a company that has national capabilities agrees. "We are no longer finding it hard to convince people that national distribution is the way to go," he says. "We now discuss the merits of particular distribution [companies]."

In order to meet that need, a number of companies now claim national distribution capabilities, including INDI in Secaucus, N.J.; M.S. in Hanover Park, Ill.; Navarre, in New Hope, Minn.; REP Co. in Bloomington, Minn.; AEC Music Distribution in Rockridge, Conn.; DNA in Cambridge, Mass.; Koch in Westbury, N.Y.; Allegro in Portland, Ore.; and RED, ADA and Caroline, all in New York.

THE DIRECT APPROACH

But not all labels are flocking to national distributors. Some labels are following in the footsteps of Tommy Boy Records, which sells direct to the 40 largest accounts in the U.S. and uses independent distributors to sell smaller accounts and leading independent outlets.

Among the labels that sell direct, with their sales efforts supplemented by indie distributors, are Profile, American Gramophone, InterSound, ILS and GTS.

Traditionally, distributors are an important tool for labels. They have a sales force in place and can provide market penetration. Also, they carry the credit risk in selling to accounts.

But with retail consolidation, labels have to look at the kind of value that their distributors are supplying, suggests Mike Delich, VP of sales at Omaha, Neb.-based American Gramophone. "Consolidation diminishes the importance of having a number of people in the street, so I can handle the business with a small number of people," he states.

So far, American Gramophone sells direct to only three major accounts: Handleman, Camelot Music and WaxWorks. "We go in and talk solely about our product, and with the care we give our line, the sales growth has been substantial" at each direct account, says Delich. "When it comes to marketing, I don't think any layer of distribution can expect to handle it as effectively as we can. As a label, we have to take a lot of the marketing responsibility ourselves."

But American Gramophone still wants to remain important to its distributors, so it cut back on its distribution network, moving from six distributors to three. "We will ask them to service smaller accounts and some major accounts, and, of course, they have fill-in responsibility," Delich explains.

LABEL AS DISTRIBUTOR

While labels such as Profile move toward embracing direct sales, imprints such as Priority, TVT and Justice have always handled their own sales. Priority has formed Priority Distribution, which handles eight imprints under its umbrella. The company specializes in urban music, rock and metal.

Bob Grossi, senior VP of distribution at Los Angeles-based Priority, says, "We have an unusual distribution setup. It is a hybrid offering the best of all possible worlds."

The company's own sales staff sells direct to most major chains and rackjobbers, which allows Priority, in the words of Grossi, to "control our own destiny with advertising and promotion." In addition, the company uses a regional network of distributors to sell to grassroots accounts. Labels going through Priority Distribution sign with the company, which then picks sub-distributors.

At TVT, label president Steve Gottlieb says his company is in discussion right now with a label with which it is seeking to cut a distribution deal. "We certainly don't want to become a distributor, but we do believe our very focused tight distribution can benefit a couple of more labels," he says. "The difference between us and distribution companies is that we really regard distribution as being in the service of the artist as opposed to being just a pipeline through which product flows. Distribution is an essential part of the product mix."

In anticipation of signing on a label, TVT has set up regional-sales and radio-promotion offices in Chicago, Atlanta, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Also, the company is significantly expanding its New York staff.

In Houston, Randall Jamail, president of self-distributed Justice, is taking a different tack. "There are probably about eight or 12 labels out there that would love to own their own distribution company," he states. "I would like to put together a small manageable group and create a cooperative relationship with distribution ownership divided among the labels."

Such a "cartel" would create a strong critical mass at retail, with distribution profits divided among the labels. With a labels-owned distribution company, Jamail points out, "you wouldn't run into the problem of the distributor trying to add more labels to grow. The incentive would be to grow from within."

SPREADING THE WEALTH

Another trend that is impacting distributors are the non-exclusive agreements they have with a lot of labels specializing in punk music. "The labels have adopted a Brett Gurewitz philosophy," says an independent distribution executive. (Gurewitz is the owner of Epitaph, which uses RED, Caroline, ADA and Cargo, among other distributors.) "But the major difference that these labels have to understand is that Epitaph protects its distributors. It spends for advertising supporting its distributors."

Corey Rusk, owner of Touch And Go, says, "We do and we don't" protect the label's distributors. "To me, the point of non-exclusive distribution is that it promotes competition and makes sure no one gets lazy." But, he adds, "We protect our labels. We have a good computer system, and we are not going to let them overbuy. Also, when it makes sense, we back them with advertising dollars."

While distributors of punk music have to wrestle with non-exclusive arrangements, regional distributors have to worry about the encroachment on their business by the trend for labels to sign exclusive national deals and/or sell direct. Furthermore, changes at music retail also are creating unanticipated changes in independent distribution.

One of the things fueling the drive to national distribution, according to observers, is consolidation of retail accounts. And as chains are bought up, leaving fewer mega-chains in their wake,

U. S. Indies Look Abroad For Outlets, Outposts And Outstanding Talent

BY GERRIE LIM

In an increasingly crowded field, many U.S. indies have learned that how well you play the global game comes down to how well you make the two critical decisions: choosing the best possible overseas partner, one who will go to bat beyond the call of duty, and finding territories that support niche-marketing beyond conventional expectations.

When both partner and territory synergize, exceptional results occur. Alligator Records, for instance, successfully sold the blues to Latin America. The Chicago label saw its 1994 overseas incursion reaping an impressive 40% of total volume sales, sparked by its two-and-a-half-year relationship with Argentine distributor DBN, which imports Alligator CDs and manufactures cassettes there, along with co-promoting tours of Alligator artists. The latter function is apparently unusual for most distributors, who usually regard tours as money-losers fraught with hassle.

"We made wise choices," says Robert DePugh, Alligator's director of licensing, who connected with DBN through a California-based broker. At that time, Alligator had already been doing Latin American business, through a five-year direct-export deal with Warner Music in Brazil. "Look for people who are well-established, have good credit references and display enthusiasm for your music," advises DePugh, who attended the MIDEM convention in France recently to acquire licensees for such far-flung regions as Greece and India.

IT'S WHO YOU KNOW

"It all has to do with your connections," says Bob Feldman, owner of singer/songwriter label Red House Records in St. Paul, Minn. His most successful territory outside Europe is Taiwan—despite the fact that his folk-based product is entirely lyric-driven and most Taiwanese don't speak English. Feldman discovered his Taiwanese distributor, Chi-Lin Music, at a NAIRD convention in Washington and now exports 15 titles there.

"They're a very aggressive company," says Feldman. "They've been wonderful about promoting our records, including placing color ads in magazines there."

Language barriers, often the blight of overseas business, are no hindrance with the right partners in place. Some U.S. indies have carved niches with jazz and blues in Japan. "We even have exclusive distributors in Japan for bluegrass," says Chris Cote, director of exports at Rounder Records, the Cambridge, Mass. roots-music label. "The Japanese are very good at amassing enormous amounts of arcane knowledge."

Japan and Korea are the key foreign markets for Los Angeles-based indie Drive Entertainment, which currently is developing a children's-music project for export—the Canadian trio Sharon, Lois &

BAD RELIGION MADE GOOD CONTACTS FOR EPITAPH IN EUROPE.

Bram, featured on Nickelodeon's "The Elephant Show." Sharon, Lois & Bram will soon teach English as a second language to children in Japan, via an interactive multimedia format. Drive's music CD-ROM "CyberBoogie With Sharon, Lois & Bram" was released in the U.S. this past September.

"Tools for teaching English are a multi-billion-dollar business [in Asia]," says Stephen Powers, Drive's founder and CEO. "I'm also told that reissues work well there."

Drive currently offers a 51-title reissue line of blues, jazz and country artists dubbed the Drive Archive; several of these recordings were licensed from Europe. "If there's an obscure live European recording of John Lee Hooker out there, I'll find it," says Powers, who attends MIDEM to acquire them.

For many U.S. indies, Europe is still the premier market and Germany the premier target. German-born Heinz Geissler, president of roots-music label Watermelon Records in Austin, Tex., licenses his entire product line in Europe through the Dutch-based distributor Munich Records. Regarding the focus on Germany, Geissler theorizes, "I think it's because Germany is just so much the opposite of the U.S. It's half the size of Texas, with really no coastline or deserts or open spaces to speak of. Folk music is often about the open spaces of America. The music is perceived as romantic and exotic in Germany."

But the genre that the Germans embrace most is one that transcends language by sheer visceral force. "Germany is our largest territory for the more aggressive punk rock," says Jeffrey Zimmitti, export manager of Triple X Records, the Los Angeles alternative-rock label that first brought the world Jane's Addiction. Triple X now sells 40% of its total product in Europe; Germany alone accounts for 25%. "Their culture is actually relatively conservative," says Zimmitti, "so they tend to cut loose in their buying habits."

BRANCHES ABROAD

Germany's importance may even warrant office space, as is the case with Sub Pop Records, the Seattle label venerated in the wake of Nirvana as principal purveyors of grunge. Sub Pop Media GmbH, located in Beverungen, near Berlin, coordinates all of Sub Pop's sub-licensing deals.

"Our main market overseas is definitely Europe," says Jonathan Poneman, president of Sub Pop. When the English press proclaimed the grunge revolution—long before flannel became fashionable—Poneman opened a London promotions office. "Certain realities exist about the importance of the U.K. market," says Poneman, "and London needs special massaging."

In a similarly strategic move, the Los Angeles alternative-rock label Epitaph Records recently opened its European office in Amsterdam, spurred by the current success of its band Offspring (1 million copies of the album "Smash" were sold outside the U.S.). "Over 50% of our business is now in Europe," says Andy Kaulkin, marketing director of Epitaph. "Brett [Gurewitz, owner/founder of Epitaph] went to MIDEM and found our distributors there. Plus, he played in [L.A. punk band] Bad Religion, and they toured Europe a lot, so he also established contacts that way." Epitaph's Amsterdam outpost serves to coordinate the company's deals with a consortium of European distributors.

Europe's beachhead status has certainly piqued rabid interest. Last month, Rounder Records launched its own European distribution company, Continental Record Services, based in the Netherlands, which now warehouses the Rounder group of 14 labels for pan-European distribution.

Mammoth Records, the Carboro, N.C.-based alternative-rock label, recently announced the opening of its London office to oversee European licensing. "This will alter the landscape there for us," declares Jay Faires, Mammoth's president. "I'm projecting our European sales will triple this year."

Overseas sales figures, however, are known to wildly fluctuate, no small thanks to wildly fluctuating foreign currencies. "It's always hard to say," says Jerry Leibowitz, international marketing manager of Salem, Mass., eclectic indie Rykodisc. "However much gross you did, the net could well be significantly different—especially after factoring in advances and royalties."

Rykodisc's advances and royalties are substantial, given its big sellers in repackaged back-catalog albums of such globally revered artists as Frank Zappa, David Bowie, Jimi Hendrix and Elvis Costello. Beginning this April, it will ambitiously issue and export remastered versions of the entire Zappa catalog. "[Zappa's] substantial body of work had not previously been marketed in many territories and certainly not in a coordinated manner," explains Leibowitz, who adds that the intrepid company "will shortly consummate a deal in India."

THE IMPORT BUSINESS

While most indies engage in supplying U.S. product to foreign markets, some also see the international scene as a viable talent-scouting pool. "It's always been important to me as an A&R source," says Mammoth's Faires, who notes that the most successful artist in his label's six-year history is the Australian band Frente!, whose "Marvin The Album" (licensed from Australia's Mushroom Records) recently went gold in Canada and even charted in Asia (No. 1 in Singapore and No. 2 in the Philippines).

Sub Pop's Poneman, who signed four new Canadian groups (Hardship Post, Jale, Zumpano and Eric's Trip), finds Canada "very underappreciated."

And in the somewhat marginalized genres of ambient and techno/dance, sourcing music from elsewhere is typically the norm. Moonshine Music, a young Los Angeles indie, maintains a branch in London for this express purpose. "We're the largest independent company that licenses European dance and techno product for the U.S.," says Stephen Levy, president of Moonshine. "Our goal is to compile street trends that are being missed, like ambient and acid jazz." In just under three years, Moonshine has released 20 compilations of ambient, techno/dance and acid jazz—70% of which comes from Europe.

RYKODISC SELLS DAVID BOWIE'S INTERNATIONALLY REVERED BACK CATALOG.

Even in the New Age/contemporary instrumental genre, it's possible to sell the proverbial coals to Newcastle. Access Music, in Petaluma, Calif., signed Japanese pianist Tadamitsu Saito to an exclusive contract and now exports him back to Japan, shipping 10,000-unit orders.

Sukay Records, in San Francisco, discovered its biggest overseas market in Japan and Hong Kong—a novel scheme in that Sukay is an all-Andean label, releasing music from Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador. "I think it's the sound of the flute," says label owner Quentin Howard. "The kena flute, which dates back to 3000 B.C., has the same wailing, haunting sound of the bamboo flutes of Asia."

It's all somewhat hair-raising perhaps, for the international game is won only after all those jewel boxes have crossed through time zones and airport terminals and banknotes have changed hands. Why do these indies stay the course and brave the fray? "It's exciting to get a feeling of cultural invigoration," says Sub Pop's Poneman. "That's what I look forward to, and that's what keeps me in the business." ■

Successful Specialists

Standout Indies Climbed To The Top By Carving Niches And Forging Identities

BY CHRIS RUBIN

Given the economics of the music industry, it's amazing that any independent labels can survive. Most of the successful indies have carved out a distinct niche for themselves, finding something the majors weren't doing and establishing a signature sound and a strong identity—whether it's punk, new age or rap.

SMASH HIT

With its multi-platinum sales of Olispring's "Smash," Epitaph challenges the majors on their own turf, proving that the potential of independents is virtually unlimited. Label president Brett Gurewitz was barely eking out a living working for others in the music business when he decided to start his own company. Gurewitz went from borrowing a few thousand dollars in 1987 to anticipated sales of 10 million units in 1995 with his punk-rock label.

He sees the small size of the label as one of the keys to its success. "We're structured differently from the majors—very artist-oriented," says Gurewitz. "I'm hoping to never have more than 15 releases per year, to be able to devote the proper attention to each."

The lure of the majors and their big money is powerful, and many bands and labels eventually make the leap. Recently, Rancid nearly departed Epitaph for Epic but reconsidered, Gurewitz thinks, because of the family atmosphere of his label, which is home to a mere baker's dozen of bands.

Gurewitz sees three elements to his success: hard work, the right decisions and good luck. "All you can do," he says, "is do the right things, and then there's still the element of chance. Epitaph tries to remove some of that random element by smart business practices.

"While bands are signed because people at the label like the music, extensive market research is used to sell what they have," he continues. "We have a remarkable database so that we can know the right stores for our artists, and it's the same with press and radio and venues and direct marketing. We collect data like mad and use it."

the same struggle as other independents do to find good material. From "Aladdin" to "The Lion King," potential chartbusters are handed to the label on a synergistic silver (make that multi-platinum) platter by the studio's movie division. The label, which got its start in 1956 as Disneyland Records, had a good year in 1994, with four releases on the charts and nine Grammy nominations for "The Lion King."

Yet, while almost anyone could have had a hit with "The Lion King," few could have realized sales of 7 million copies. "We have a great ability to cross-promote and find partner tie-ins," says Carolyn Mayer Beug, senior VP of entertainment and educational productions. "Whatever corporate tie-ins are available, we're there. We do way more than going to a record retailer."

Beug hopes to do the same for other studios and their soundtrack releases. "We're ready and able to try and match the success of 'Lion King.'" While the label's main franchise is soundtracks to the studio's animated films, Beug sees beyond that. "We're looking to expand the label," she says. "It would be stupid not to." Aiming for an adult audience, Disney will soon be releasing "Rhythm Of The Pridelands," an African-themed recording by Lebo M., who was involved in the "Lion King" project.

WALT DISNEY'S "LION KING"

RAPPING UP DANCE

Rap label Tommy Boy was founded in 1981, and though the label was purchased by Time Warner in 1986, it maintains independent distribution. Founder and chairman Tom Silverman previously ran Disco News (which became Dance Music Report) and started following rap back in 1980. His early access to the scene, definitely a case of being in the right place at the right time, has paid off: Naughty By Nature has sold more than 1.5 million, and, Silverman says proudly, "We have broken someone every year to gold or platinum, starting with De La Soul, then Digital Underground, Queen Latifah and House Of Pain."

Silverman says the key for independents is to "stay focused on whatever it is you're doing. You can't release 50 records a year without turning into a factory. And reflect the consumer you serve; it's not an ego exercise." He suggests finding an area that the major labels aren't already in. "See what they can't see—or find an area that's so minor they don't want to be bothered with it. The major labels tried to mechanize it like Henry Ford, but what works for cars doesn't necessarily work for music."

TOP PRIORITY

Today, Priority Records is a major force in rap. However, the label began—as many have—by putting out compilations, everything from rock to country to disco. Priority's first rap release was Eazy-E, and the label continues to pursue cutting-edge acts.

Label president and founder Brian Turner has a reputation for taking chances, and that's kept him on the receiving end of tapes from front-line rap managers. Priority is looking in new directions as well, making inroads into rock with Magnapop and Sons Of Elvis.

Prior to starting his label, Turner had been working at Capitol Records and made a distribution deal with them. "I knew I had a shot for six months," he recalls. "If I didn't make money, I'd be out of business." Turner assessed his skills in the creative area and hired others, including partner Mark Cerami, for finance and marketing. "I told them, 'Just do what you've been doing before at your other jobs.'" The first release, "Kings Of Rap," sold 200,000, and the label went on to Give Them One Good Region

Local Labels Congregate
In Cities Where Talent Gathers

BY RICK CLARK

Austin, Chapel Hill, Chicago, Minneapolis and Seattle have been, and continue to be, proven hotbeds of great new music. Supporting each of these communities is a network of homegrown indie labels, some of which have stayed resolutely underground, while others have branched out with sizable major-label affiliations. Billboard talked to a number of these labels for a read on their roles in their respective markets.

AUSTIN-TATIOUS LABELS

Country and roadhouse rock and blues, as well as great singer/songwriters have all been part of Austin's musical legacy. And there's also a healthy alternative community in this capital city.

Trance Syndicate, founded by Butthole Surfers drummer King Coffey, has arguably become Texas' preeminent upstart indie label to watch.

"Trance used to be just one sound, which was really noisy and underground," says Trance's Craig Stewart. "But now we have really branched out to including artists like Roky Erickson and a band labels: Dos, which features Texas-style country or roots rock like Stephen Bruon and Glen Clark, and the harder rock-oriented DMZ, which has Billy White, King Friday and former Sony act Dangerous Toys.

Kim Wilson, Doug Sahm and Doyle Bramhall—people like that." The label's biggest-selling title is Doyle Bramhall's "Bird Nest On The Ground," which has sold more than 75,000 copies so far.

The Texas singer/songwriter tradition, particularly in Austin, was what motivated the formation of Watermelon Records, whose acts include Alejandro Escovedo and Don Walser.

Says Heinz Geissler, co-owner, with John T. Kunz, of Watermelon Records, "Chicago had Flying Fish, the Northeast had Rounder, and there was Kaleidoscope on the West Coast. Meanwhile, there was no label here in Texas specializing in the singer/songwriter area. Nanci Griffith had to go from Austin to Rounder Records to get her stuff released. That is really one of the reasons I started Watermelon Records."

Upcoming Watermelon releases featuring regional artists include Santiago Jimenez Jr. and Monte Warden.

GET ME TO THE CHAPEL HILL

Chapel Hill, N.C., has produced a steady stream of artists—Superchunk, Corrosion Of Conformity, Juliana Hatfield, Dillon Fence and others. The quality and abundance of new talent spawned numerous pronouncements that the university town was "the next Seattle."

Meanwhile, local labels like Merge, Flavor: Contra, Detox and Jesus Christ, are springing up in response to the multiply-

"We have had to evolve, because many of our older artists are passing away," says Antone's CEO Harry Friedman. "Our direction will continue to be blues or blues-esque, but we have got to grow with the times. So we have artists Sue Foley, ROLLINS ALONG: DI has received an update on the independent label set up by Henry Rollins, which the Rollins Band vocalist unveiled to us early last year when it was still on the drawing board (Billboard, Feb. 26, 1994).

The label will be known as 213CD (the name is a gloss on the name of Rollins' book publishing company, 2.13.61). It will bow March 15 with "Language," a solo album by Rollins Band guitarist Chris Haskett, and "Live In Europe 1989," a collection of readings by the amazing Hubert Selby Jr., author of such major works of fiction "Last Exit To Brooklyn" and "The Demon."

These albums will be followed in early April by "Surface-To-Air Serpents," a solo effort by Exene Cervenka of X, and "Critical Mass," a new set by the Matthew Shipp Quartet. (Both artists are represented in other Rollins ventures: Cervenka has published two books on 2.13.61, while an earlier album by pianist Shipp has just been released by Infinite Zero, Rollins' Warner Bros.-distributed reissue label with Rick Rubin.)

213CD will be distributed by a network of rock-oriented indies, including Caroline, Dutch East, Twin Cities, and RED, as well as book distributors that currently handle 2.13.61 titles.

When the new label was in the planning stages, it wasn't necessarily conceived as an independent venture. Says Gary I, Rollins' right-hand man at 2.13.61, "We'd been toying with the idea of going with one of these major-owned independents, but with these we thought it would be better if we did it ourselves. We have control and we know who we're dealing with."

He adds, "We're still punk rock." Good deal, we say.

ARIGATO: We wanted to wish Ichiban Records in Atlanta a happy 10th anniversary, but the company has done a pretty dog-gone good job of celebrating its own nativity.

This week, a fairly spiffy full-color booklet hit DI's desk, detailing all you'd ever want to know about the decade-old label.

For those of you who don't know, Ichiban was founded in 1985 by chairman/CEO John Abbey and president Nina Easton. Abbey had already launched the U.K.'s Blues & Soul magazine, which today is one of the most solid publications surveying black music. He met Easton, then head of public relations and promotion for CBS Records in Scandinavia, while on tour with the Reddings in the land of the midnight sun.

The pair later met in Atlanta and established Ichiban as a home for such R&B acts as William Bell, Clarence Carter, and Curtis Mayfield, who were label-less at the time. Thus, an Englishman and a native of Finland put together a company that today is a significant fount of the best American rap and R&B around.

Ichiban's handy canned history, which also includes a raft of testimonials from retailers, distributors, and radio types (and journalists like Billboard's Ed Christman and J.R. Reynolds), comes complete with a 15-track CD that looks back on memorable hits by such label acts as Carter, Bell, M.C. Breed, Slave, 95 South, MC Shy-D, and up-and-coming rock unit Deadeye Dick.

Clearly, Ichiban—which in recent years has flown its entire staff to Switzerland and Mexico for company meetings—is a company that knows how to toss a party. Congratulations to John, Nina, and the whole staff.

B-ING THERE: Chris Joyce, executive VP of Independent National Distributors

by Chris Morris

Inc., rang us up to says that rapper Eric B. has inaugurated a new label, 95th St. Recordings, which will be distributed through INDI. The imprint takes its name from the recording facility the musician operates in New York.

You may remember Eric B. as half of the rap team of Eric B. & Rakim, which enjoyed several top-selling albums in the late '80s and early '90s on 4th & Broadway, Uni, and MCA.

FLAG WAVING: Ask Lida Husik if she's artistically schizophrenic, and she'll say, "Definitely. Perhaps even mentally. I have very distinct parts of my personality."

But the Washington, D.C.-based singer/songwriter/guitarist adds, "I'm not going to do a country record."

That said, the different sides of Husik's musical makeup are on display on a pair of very different albums: "Joyride," due from Caroline March 7, is a more rock-derived work that emphasizes Husik's harmonized vocals and a guitar-oriented presentation. Last year's "Evening At The Grange," on Caroline's Astralwerks imprint, was a collaboration with English electronic musician

Beaumont Hannant that demonstrated more experimental tendencies.

A comparison of the song "Star," from "Joyride," and its hip-hop relative "Starburst 7," on "Grange," will give listeners an idea of Husik's wide musical range.

Husik, who came out of the active D.C. musical matrix to cut three albums for Kramer's Shimmy Disc, admits she was an anomaly in her hometown: "I never fit in with the dominant music scene, because it was the Dischord scene ... [my music] just wasn't punk."

Her music is a distinctive blend of diverse influences, from the Velvet Underground to Marianne Faithfull and even Kate Bush. The music on "Joyride" is especially impressive—insistent yet dreamy, brimming with lovely melodies and spiked with outbursts of guitar noise, some of which is produced by an infrequently used device, the E-bow, which allows for nearly infinite sustain.

"This guy Mike Fellows used [an E-bow] playing in one of Ian Mackaye's early bands, Embrace," Husik says. "I loved it and asked him what the hell it was."

While Husik can't duplicate the lush harmonies on "Joyride" in her shows ("Live, I'm greatly diminished," she says), she will front a hard-rocking trio on the road this fall; in the interim, she'll be working on songs for a late-'95 solo follow-up album.

With an avenue for her more ethereal side on the Caroline subsidiary, she says, "I couldn't have a better situation. I think my next rock record will be much more that, now that I know I can do the more dreamy stuff [on the Astralwerks]."

ing band population. "There are about 70 bands playing in this area, and there aren't enough clubs for everyone to play regularly," says Jettison Records owner Todd Goss. Jettison has put out 35 releases, including those by Picasso Trigger and Blue-Green Gods. "It isn't that competitive between local labels," Goss continues. "Mac McCaughan, of Superchunk, gave me all sorts of advice when I started my label and helped me out a lot."

Merge Records, run by Superchunk leaders Laura Ballance and Mac McCaughan, was founded in 1989 and has put out almost 80 releases. Superchunk's "Foolish" is currently Merge's best-selling title.

Mammoth Records is building a major studio facility in Chapel Hill for label bands, and it will also be a place to check out new talent and attract producers. But label owner Jay Faires cautions against any comparisons to other talent hot spots. "To call something 'the next scene' puts too much pressure on bands and everything else. Bands should develop at their own pace," says Faires, whose recent releases include Dillon Fence's excellent "Living Room Scene."

"We just signed a Chapel Hill band called Squirrel Nut Zippers, who are amazing. The female lead singer sounds like Billie Holiday," Faires continues. "We have a lot of soundtrack possibilities for them, and I think that is where they can really start to build a career."

CHICAGO, CHICAGO

With such regional artists as Veruca Salt, Liz Phair, Smashing Pumpkins, Everclear, Figdish, Loud Lucy, The Lupins, Triple Fast Action, Urge Overkill and others landing major-label deals, there is much talk from outsiders about Chicago being the hot musical scene. However, most local indie labels will say there is a load of great music in the Windy City simply because millions of people live there.

Regardless, Chicago has always made significant contributions in music, from rock, pop, blues and jazz to folk. And the city's indie labels reflect that diversity.

"There are a large number of talented artists in Chicago, but to label it as a 'scene' per se, is a bit simplistic," says Minty Fresh owner and Gellen regional A&R person Jim Powers, whose band Veruca Salt has achieved enormous modern-rock and college-radio success. "I think that people here are generally very supportive of each other, but there isn't a shared aesthetic. Everybody is doing their own thing."

One organization trying to create a dialog with all the region's diverse labels is The Independent Label Festival, which serves as an information resource and puts on an annual indie-label showcase in Chicago. This year's event will be held July 28 to 29 at Columbia College and at more than 20 participating clubs throughout the city.

Chicago's rich talent pool also has attracted indie labels from other areas.

DELMARK'S REGINOLD R. ROBINSON

BRUCE IGLAUER OF ALLIGATOR

One such label is Thrill Jockey, whose roster includes The See And Cake, Freakwater, Gaunt and Tortoise. Says Bertina Richards, "I started Thrill Jockey a couple of years ago in New York. I moved to Chicago last August, because all my bands are in the Midwest—and most are from Chicago."

One Chicago indie label that receives enormous praise is Touch And Go, one of

"We are all friends with the bands," says Scott Giampino of Touch And Go. "We don't really have contracts. It is all verbal agreements, and our royalty situation is pretty much 50-50."

"Touch And Go is like the flagship Chicago label. They have integrity, and when they say they are going to do something they do it," says Patrick Monaghan, whose Carrot Top Records has released titles by Frank Orrall from Poi Dog Pondering, garage-country band The Handsome Family and the Coctails, an eclectic quartet that incorporates everything from free jazz to smart ambient guitar-rooted pop/rock. Carrot Top also distributes the Coctails' Hi-Ball Records, as well as Sweet Pea and Minneapolis label Generator.

Another significant Chicago indie is Wax Trax, which made its name during the 1980s as a premier industrial-music label, with such homegrown acts as Ministry and My Life With The Thrill Kill Kult, as well as numerous overseas bands. Formed in 1981 by Jim Nash and Dannie Flesher, Wax Trax celebrated 13 years of success with the three-CD anthology called "Black Box." Since 1993, Wax Trax has been marketed and distributed by TVT Records out of New York.

Flying Fish, another regional label, features a wide-ranging roster of organic, primarily acoustic, music. Its first artist, signed 20 years ago, was Chicago jazz/blues pianist Erwin Helfer. Today, Flying Fish continues to mine the region with releases by Michael Smith, Jason Eklund and others, as well as artists from all over the globe.

Chicago has always enjoyed an endless stream of great blues music. Two of the genre's most successful indie labels, Delmark and Alligator, operate from there.

Delmark's blues roster is almost entirely regional, as are three-quarters of its jazz artists. Currently, Delmark is putting out the second album by Reginold R. Robinson, a critically acclaimed young local ragtime composer.

"This isn't a coincidence that Alligator is in Chicago. I am not a native of Chicago. I came to Chicago because it has the most active live-performance blues scene of any city in the country," says Alligator founder Bruce Iglauer. "With Delmark and Blind Pig in Chicago, as well as labels like Rounder and its subsidiary Bullseye, Black Top and Antone's, we compete for the

Over the last half-century, indie labels have helped set the course for the history of the record industry. While the 10 imprints profiled below by no means represent the alpha and omega of indies through history, each left its own indelible stamp on the business and deserves kudos for breaking significant new artistic or commercial ground.

LABEL: Verve Records
FOUNDED: 1944 by Norman Granz in New York

ARTISTS: Ella Fitzgerald, Billie Holiday, Oscar Peterson, Dizzy Gillespie, Roy Eldridge, Louis Armstrong, Count Basie, Sarah Vaughan, Lester Young, Bill Evans, Stan Getz

SIGNIFICANCE: Formed by concert promoter Granz initially as a label outlet for his "Jazz At The Philharmonic" productions, Verve (originally known as Norgran and Clef, before taking its final handle in the mid-'50s) became synonymous with top-of-the-line mainstream jazz recordings through the '50s and '60s. Following his sale of the label to MGM (which is today part of the PolyGram family) in 1960, Granz produced and released more exceptional jazz on his Pablo imprint (now owned by Fantasy).

LABEL: Specialty Records
FOUNDED: 1945 by Art Rupe in Los Angeles

ARTISTS: Little Richard, Larry Williams, Lloyd Price, Roy Milton, Percy Mayfield, Joe and Jimmy Liggins, Guitar Slim

SIGNIFICANCE: The history of rock 'n' roll (or R&B and gospel, for that matter) is unimaginable without the contributions of Specialty. The label's frequent forays into the studios of the deep South for talent resulted in such frenetic classics as Little Richard's early piano-pounding hits and blues immortals like Guitar Slim's "The Things I Used To Do." Started anew in the '80s by Rupe's daughter, Specialty's formidable legacy is being well-mined by Fantasy, which owns its library of masters.

LABEL: Atlantic Records
FOUNDED: 1947 by Ahmet Ertegun and Herb Abramson in New York
ARTISTS: Ray Charles, Ruth Brown, Big

Joe Turner, the Drifters, the Coasters, The Modern Jazz Quartet, John Coltrane, Ornette Coleman, Aretha Franklin, Buffalo Springfield

SIGNIFICANCE: Begun as a jazz label, Atlantic quickly became a major fount of rhythm & blues (the term itself was coined by key executive Jerry Wexler), releasing revelatory music by soloist Charles and seminal groups like the Drifters. The company also released crucial, forward-looking jazz recordings by Coltrane and Coleman; set the tone for '60s soul with Franklin's classic albums and its distribution of Stax Records; and rapped into the delining rock music of the late '60s. Purchased by Warner Communications in 1968, it became a keystone of today's WEA powerhouse.

LABEL: Sun Records
FOUNDED: 1952 by Sam Phillips in Memphis

ARTISTS: Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis, Johnny Cash, Roy Orbison, Carl Perkins, Charlie Rich, Howlin' Wolf, Jackie Brenston, Junior Parker

SIGNIFICANCE: Originally a recording service that licensed blues and R&B masters (including Brenston's "Rocket 88," considered the first rock 'n' roll single by many historians) to indie labels, Phillips' operation became the great crucible of rockabilly and rock 'n' roll in the '50s. It brought Elvis Presley to the world and introduced a host of artists who successfully fused strains of country and R&B into a new, pacesetting sound. Few labels can honestly claim to have midwived the rock 'n' roll revolt; this is one of them.

LABEL: Motown Records
FOUNDED: 1959 by Berry Gordy in Detroit

ARTISTS: the Supremes, the Miracles, the Four Tops, the Temptations, Marvin Gaye, Stevie Wonder, Gladys Knight & The Pips, Junior Walker & The All Stars, the Marvelettes, Martha & The Vandellas

SIGNIFICANCE: Started as a minimally capitalized venture by songwriter Gordy, Motown and its family of labels went on to define pop-soul during the '60s, using a talented staff of producers, songwriters and musicians to grind out hit after hit. By the end of the decade, artists like Gaye and Wonder took their own route, adding revolutionary wrinkles to the fabric of R&B. Now owned by PolyGram, Motown developed perhaps the most luminous history of any American indie.

LABEL: Stax Records
FOUNDED: 1960 by Jim Stewart and Estelle Axton in Memphis

ARTISTS: Otis Redding, Sam & Dave, Booker T. & The MG's, Eddie Floyd, Jonnie Taylor, Rufus & Carla Thomas, the Staple Singers, Albert King, the Mar-Keys, the Bar-Kays

SIGNIFICANCE: The Southern soul label of the '60s, Stax (which was distributed by Atlantic during its indie epoch) cannily mined the Bluff City's native talent, mating its stable of stomping soul shouters with its crack house band, the MG's, and such homegrown writing talent as Isaac Hayes and David Porter. The firm was brought to the ground by disastrous fiscal mismanagement in the '70s, but its vibrant legacy has been brought back home in a series of Atlantic and Fantasy reissues.

LABEL: Rouder Records
FOUNDED: 1970 by Ken Irwin, Bill Nowlin and Marian Leighton-Levy in Cambridge, Mass.

ARTISTS: George Thorogood & The Destroyers, Ted Hawkins, Charles Brown, Alison Krauss, Tabu Ley Rochereau, hundreds more

SIGNIFICANCE: As just the short list above suggests, Rouder is among the most eclectic imprints in existence. Kicking off business with an initial release by banjoist George Pegram, the label delved into just about every imaginable avenue of American music—and a variety of offshore styles as well. Thorogood's breakthrough in the late '70s supplied a new commercial impetus for the company, which today boasts an enormous catalog and its own independent distributorship, Distribution North America.

LABEL: Alligator Records
FOUNDED: 1971 by Bruce Iglauer in Chicago

ARTISTS: Hound Dog Taylor, Son Seals, Koko Taylor, Lonnie Brooks, Albert Collins, Lonnie Mack, Roy Buchanan, Johnny Winter, L'il Ed & The Imperials, Little Charlie & The Nightcats, Dave Hole

SIGNIFICANCE: Formulated as a home for hitherto-unrecorded Windy City blues artists, Alligator metamorphosed into an award-winning label devoted to the attention of those artists, but the competition is very friendly."

MINNEAPOLIS MAXIMUS

Before Seattle became a dominant music force, there was Minneapolis. In a sense, many of Seattle's biggest bands owe a lot of their influences to Twin City bands like Hüsker Dü, the Replacements and Soul Asylum. These days, Minneapolis seems a little more subdued, but a closer look still reveals an active music community.

Significant regional labels include Twin/Tone, Medium Cool, Clean, Big Money, Prospective, Omnium, Amphetamine Reptile and East Side Digital.

Twin/Tone, founded in the early '80s and now distributed by Restless, continues as one of the area's longest-lived indies. The original home of the Replacements and Soul Asylum, it today boasts a subsidiary in Medium Cool and distributes Clean. Medium Cool numbers

THE GREAT NORTHWEST

"This really shouldn't be a great place to be, but it really still is a great place to go out and see bands," says Meghan Smith of Empty Records, a Seattle label that has put out 25 releases, including titles by Gas Huffer and Steel Wool. Smith's amazement is echoed by many music people in the Seattle area. How could a place so utterly exploited continue to produce such vital talent?

The endlessly documented success stories of bands like Nirvana, Pearl Jam, Soundgarden, Hole and many others are largely due to a vibrant visionary indie label community and solid local radio and media support. It's a textbook example of regionalism at its productive best.

"It is a good situation for the groups, because there are so many labels that, if one label is a little too booked, chances are among its artists former Replacements guitarist Slim Dunlap and the much-acclaimed Athens, Ga., singer-songwriter Jack Logan (whose two-CD debut, "Bulk," was one of 1994's critical hits). Clean, the onetime home of the now-defunct Trip Shakespeare, has garnered attention of late with its debut offering from Polara.

Among the hottest bands coming out of Minneapolis is Balloon Guy, a quartet that has released several 7-inch singles on the Generator label and has just signed to Capitol. Smattering, a local supergroup made up of members of Balloon Guy, Polara and Mountain Singers, is putting out a new album on Generator.

The producer for Smattering and Balloon Guy is Ed Ackerson, whose group Polara has just released its debut on Clean. Ackerson has also produced releases by Minneapolis bands the Hang Ups, Hovercraft and many others.

Indie label Amphetamine Reptile has local bands like Cows, Hammerhead and Love 666. Nevertheless, its biggest success has been the first release by New York band Helmet, which sold more than 40,000 units. Am Rep continues to have vinyl rights for the Helmet catalog.

"The only reason a label like mine has been around since 1986 is largely due to a Helmet, and one or two other bands that helped support the other things that sold less," says Am Rep's Tom Hazelmyer.

documentation of a variety of blues styles from around the nation. The label revitalized the career of Texas bluesman Collins; released new music by such blues-guitar titans as Mack, Buchanan and Winter; and began tapping the best of the international blues scene with its signing of Australian slide master Hole. Still a vital independent presence in '95.

LABEL: Tommy Boy Records
FOUNDED: 1982 by Tommy Silverman in New York

ARTISTS: Afrika Bambaata & Soul Sonic Force, Digital Underground, House Of Pain, Naughty By Nature, Queen Latifah, RuPaul, Coolio

SIGNIFICANCE: Rising out of the NYC underground, Tommy Boy made its first major impression with the groundbreaking rap single "Planet Rock" by Bambaata. Over the years, the company has remained on the cutting edge of rap and dance music, scoring major commercial coups with such recent signees as left-field diva RuPaul and West Coast rap giant Coolio. Owned by Warner Bros., Tommy Boy continues to distribute most of its hits independently.

LABEL: Sub Pop Records
FOUNDED: 1986 by Bruce Pavitt in Seattle; partner Jonathan Poneman joined company in 1987

ARTISTS: Green River, Mudhoney, Nirvana, Soundgarden, Tad, Afghan Whigs, L7, Pond, Velocity Girl, The Reverend Horton Heat, Big Chief, Love Battery, Combustible Edison, Sunny Day Real Estate, the Spinanes

SIGNIFICANCE: The outgrowth of an Olympia, Wash., rock fanzine called Subterranean Pop, the Sub Pop label quickly became the home of many of the city's best-known and most successful grunge rock bands (many of whom were eventually lured into the major-label fold). In the intervening years, Pavitt and Poneman have looked outside of the Puget Sound area for the company's cutting-edge acts; its latter-day success is reflected in its involvement with Warner Music Group on both the distribution and label sides. ■

Charting The Best Indies

BY GEOFF MAYFIELD

Sorting independently distributed titles from those that are not has been the stickiest chore each year when the chart department assembles the recaps for Billboard's annual Indies Spotlight. But this time, that procedure was less complicated than it had been in previous years.

There are still plenty of hybrid situations afoot—five of the six major conglomerates have planted their feet in the indie camp in one way or another. But the reason that compiling this year's charts was easier than it was in, say, 1993 or 1994, is because independent labels were more committed to singular distribution paths. In the not-too-distant past, labels like Next Plateau and Big Beat would send some titles through independent distribution, others through majors (the former through PGD, the latter through WEA). But this year, those labels primarily used the majors' pipelines.

The standings of the titles in these recaps are confined to titles that were sold through independent distributors. The label standings only reflect each company's performance in the indie sector. Promotional assistance by a major does not disqualify a title from the indie recaps, but if even one configuration of the title in question was sold through a major, it is excluded from the charts, and points from those titles do not count toward the label rankings.

One hybrid bears explanation: the cassette single of 20 Fingers' "Short Dick Man" was sold by Zoo through BMG, but all maxi-single configurations of that title were sold through indies. Thus, it is included in the Top Indie Dance Maxi-Singles list, but does not qualify for the other singles recaps.

The charts in this spotlight represent a 52-week period, from the Jan. 29, 1994, issue of Billboard through the Jan. 21, 1995, issue. Because this year's Indies Spotlight was published earlier than last year's, there is a three-week overlap between these recaps and the ones that were published in the 1994 edition.

In addition to the categories that were published in the 1994 Spotlight, we have added Top Indie Reggae Albums and Top Indie Reggae Labels. The Top Indie Classical categories combine titles that appeared on each of Billboard's three bi-weekly lists: Top Classical Albums, Top Classical Crossover and Top Off-Price Classical.

The recaps are compiled by the same methodologies that were used to calculate the Year In Music recaps in the 1994 year-end issue:

* The charts based on The Billboard 200, Top R&B Albums, Hot Rap Singles, Hot Dance Maxi-Singles Sales, Top Jazz Albums, Top Contemporary Jazz Albums and Top Reggae Albums are compiled from the actual SoundScan numbers for the weeks each title appeared on those charts. Similarly, the classical recaps are based on The Billboard Classical 50.

* For the Hot 100 and Hot R&B Singles lists, gross impressions from Broadcast Data Systems are combined with accumulated SoundScan unit sales and weekly small-market radio playlist points. As with the above-mentioned sales recaps, titles only receive points for the weeks they appeared on the charts.

* The Top New Age and Top World Music charts were not converted to SoundScan methodology until December 1994. Therefore, the recaps for these categories are based on a point system, determined by accumulating weekly points, which are assigned to each album for each week on the chart. The point values are established in a complex inverse relationship to the chart position.

The continued vitality of the independent sector is reflected by the fact that two of the No. 1 titles in these recaps were not just the top-selling indie records on their respective charts, but beat out all majors-distributed competitors, too. The soundtrack from "The Lion King" ruled over all comers on The Billboard 200 in the February-to-February calendar, while 69 Boyz's "Tootsee Roll" rolled past the majors' titles on Hot Rap Singles. ■ the survivors, in wholly unrelated initiatives, appear to be searching for ways to cut back on vendors.

DISTRIBUTION OPTIONS

Some of the big chains, like Tower Records/Video, Blockbuster Music and Camelot Music, have been trying to get away from multiple suppliers and prefer to buy from a larger national distributor. Consequently, some regional distributors have seen their business diminish with those accounts.

But others say that regional distributors remain healthy thanks to the vibrancy of the independent-label sector. "There are a lot of new independent labels being started by people who had been artists, in production, or with a major label," says RED's Becker. "Punk is the new music for young white males, and rap is the new pop music. The indie sector is really healthy right now, with a lot of great music being produced for it and plenty of great opportunity available there."

Duncan Hutchison, CEO of AEC Music

Distribution, argues there will always be a place for regional distributors. As a distributor, "you have to have labels that are not exclusive or not national if you want to be in touch with the labels that are happening tomorrow," he says. "That is where the new talent is coming from. It doesn't always come from existing labels with national distribution deals." ■ pioneer West Coast gangsta rap.

Says Turner, "Of the guys we started with—the other labels—there are none left. They're out of business or sold off. The most important thing for me is staying independent. That's what keeps me apart—being an independent that will do $100 million in sales."

HIGHER AUTHORITY

Higher Octave is probably the best-known indie label for New Age and contemporary-instrumental music, with more than 90 releases by 35 artists—including Ottmar Liebert and Craig Chaquico—on its roster. President Matt Marshall started the label nearly a decade ago. "We saw a niche happening and felt that New Age music was going to be a new category," he recalls. "We did research to see if we wanted to be management or what, and felt there was room for a label."

HIGHER OCTAVE'S OTTMAR LIEBERT

Marshall grew up in the entertainment industry, working as a talent agent and running a management firm, among other jobs, and brought those skills and relationships to this label. "I have strong experience and hired great people, a strong team," he says.

Instead of spending money on promotional parties, Higher Octave chose to invest in packaging and promo CDs. "We tried to do what a major would do," says Marshall. "We send records out to lots of radio and press and do lots of promotion."

Marshall, who seeks a balance between the mainstream and alternative markets, notes, "We're at Tower and Virgin, as well as at Bodhi Tree and other alternative outlets."

Regarding the basic rules of running his company, Marshall says, "It's show business: part show, part business. And it's important to know what the business is. We're an independent, not a major. There's no room for ego. There are lots of players in the industry, and you must know where you stand." ■ there is another new label that will pick them up," says Bruce Pavitt, who, with Jonathon Poneman, formed the region's most successful indie, Sub Pop.

ONE GOOD REGION

"With the number of [so-called] 'alternative' bands being signed to majors, it has really become a lottery—and everyone is buying tickets. As a result, there are twice as many bands, so there are more potential rewards to be had," says C/Z Records' Daniel House, whose label has put out 80 releases so far, including artists like 7 Year Bitch and Built To Spill.

C/Z's first release, in 1985, was called "Deep Six" and featured Soundgarden, Skin Graft and The Melvins. It not only was the earliest significant document of the emerging scene, but was a major inspiration for the genesis of Sub Pop.

"We always felt that the music could potentially be commercial. The name Sub Pop was built on the premise that very cool indie music could be popular if given the opportunity," explains

Pavitt, whose label has not only built a lucrative catalog, but also continues to have point participation on the entire Nirvana catalog.

Most recently, Sub Pop sold a 49% interest in the label to the Warner Music Group U.S. for a reported amount of over $20 million, as well as creating a publishing arrangement with PolyGram.

Sub Pop distributes numerous labels, including Super Electro (a garage punk label owned by Caryn Palmier and Mudhoney's Steve Turner), Fly Daddy

(which features arty pop duo Cardinal and the Moles) and Pop Llama, which is releasing the debut album by current major-label attention-getter The Presidents Of The United States Of America.

Beyond Seattle, Washington cities like Bellingham and Olympia, as well as Portland, Ore., and Boise, Idaho, are enjoying very productive scenes with indie labels such as K Records, Skinnie Girl, Kill Rock Stars, Top Drawer, Chainsaw, Atlas, Candy Ass and Estrus. ■

ENTERTAINMENT INDUSTRY NEWS OF INFO SYSTEMS, VIDEO GAMES & RETAIL-TECH MEDIA

Labels' Web Sites Reflect Innovation

BY MARILYN A. GILLEN

NEW YORK—Windham Hill, Curb, and Rykodisc are among the latest record companies to have put down stakes in the World Wide Web. And like their fellow online homesteaders—from Warner, Sony, and Atlantic to American, Geffen, and Caroline—each has a distinct blueprint for building a presence in this bustling cybernabe.

Not that they're not keeping up with what the Joneses are doing.

"In our research, we've found that your top users, for larger companies, are your competitors, and then people within your own company, and then your customers," says Terry Myerson, president/CEO of commercial Web-site developer Interse, which developed Windham Hill's site in conjunction with the label. "This offers a wealth of information—from new signings to upcoming releases and label news—that would not necessarily be available anywhere else," says Myerson.

"It's not so much competition as curiosity," says Brad Holliday of the intra-industry user phenomenon. Holliday handles progressive marketing at Curb and also designed the label's still-evolving Web site (<http://www.curb.com>), which has been taking increasingly impressive shape since December. "This is new to everyone, so there's no set formula yet. It's interesting to see what the other guy's doing."

The Windham Hill site, which officially launches this month after two months of low-profile testing, already has seen numerous fellow label residents stop by to say hi, according to richly detailed user data compiled by Interse. One such label visitor left a message in Windham Hill's open-forum E-mail section complimenting its design—and directing browsers to its own nearby site. "We didn't put in a link for them," Myerson deadpans.

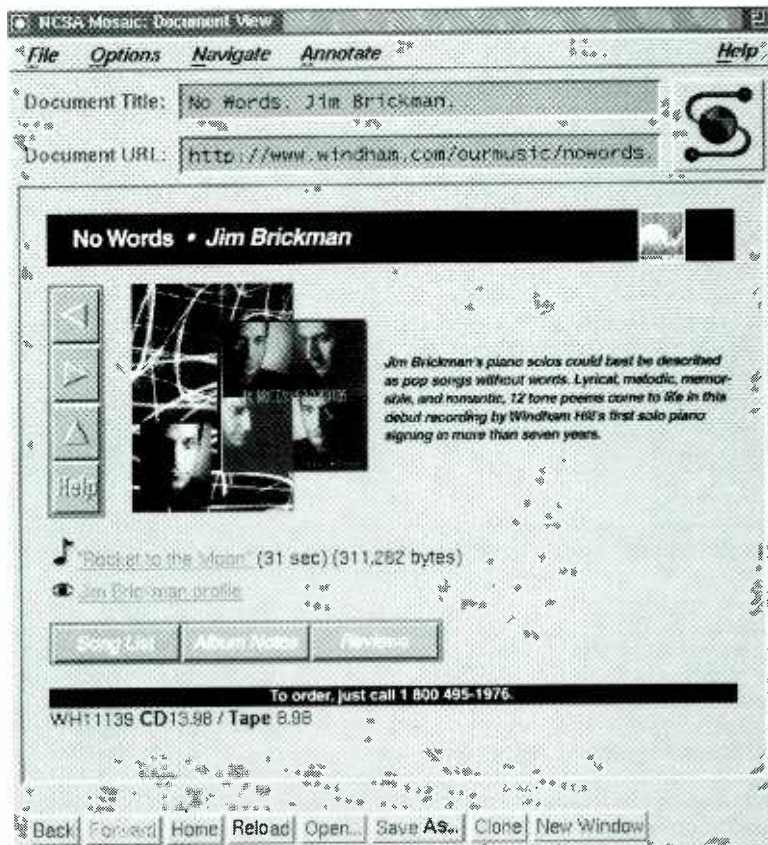

Such a "link," which sends users with a click of the mouse to other online sites, has been set up in conjunction with Web-site IUMA; users clicking on the label's logo there are transported into the Windham Hill home page. Other links, in and out, are being explored. "It keeps you from just preaching to the converted," says Ray Gattinella, Windham Hill VP of marketing.

RYKODISC PROMO

Intersite links are key to the early World Wide Web strategy of Rykodisc, which has only a "home page" up thus far (<http://www.shore.net~rykodisc>), although it has a "full-blown site" on Delphi.

"Basically we're set up on the Web right now as a gatekeeper—to direct people to other sites that will interest them," says Lars Murray, Rykodisc's manager of special projects and the label's online point person. "Soon, very soon I hope, we will be adding more of our own content in the form of audio and videoclips within our site."

A current Rykodisc online Sugar promotion keys into the label's multisite aesthetic. Tied to the release of the video for the band's newest Ryko single, "Gee Angel," the promotion is a scavenger hunt that sends users bouncing through a variety of Usenet "alt." newsgroups looking for clues. Winners receive a variety of Sugar merchandise.

FULL-BLOWN SITES

Windham Hill (windham.com) and Curb fall more cleanly into the "full-blown" site category, boasting such offerings as downloadable audio- and videoclips, biographies, interviews, and chat areas within dedicated sites.

For Windham Hill, the overarching focus of its approach is translating the strong connection—indeed affection—customers seem to have for the label in the digital domain, says Gattinella.

Gattinella characterizes that connection as a strong "brand identity" that he sees as rare in the music industry. "Most people think in terms of artists and not labels—Mariah Carey and not Sony," he says. "But people feel like they know, and trust, us."

The site is broken down into four sections: Quick Tour; Our Music; Tune In; and Keep In Touch, which contains an online registration form and survey. Users who complete the survey will find a Windham Hill CD sampler and catalog in their mailboxes (the actual, old-fashioned ones) within a week.

"If you are a new artist, like me, people don't know who you are, but they know that they like music on Windham Hill," says label artist and online convert Jim Brickman, whose debut album was released last spring. "So this gives them a forum to browse—and hopefully to discover you."

Brickman, whose background includes composing such classic ad jingles as GTE's "We bring good things to life," has a unique perspective on the medium. "I have seen how critical marketing can be to the success of a product," he says, "and as an artist, I know the value of forging a connection with your audience. This facilitates both."

Windham Hill artists also benefit from radio station listings in the "Tune In" area (with phone numbers for requests) and listings of tour sites both large and high school-auditorium small.

Online sales are not yet part of the equation, although an 800 number for placing orders is a constant, if nonintrusive, presence. "Right now, we're more interested in creating excitement at retail," says Gattinella.

In more unique applications of the arena's potential, Gattinella says dueling album cover concepts may be posted online to let users choose and works in progress test-marketed. Brickman says he is struck with the idea of uploading a snippet of an emerging idea to see how it flies.

COUNTRY ROADS

Curb Records' site is similar in many ways but unique in that it is one of a handful of country-music pioneers. "There's a good amount of overlap between country-music fans and online users," says Holliday. "It's following a little more slowly, maybe, than other music, but it's definitely following."

The site's main interface is a graphical jukebox, through which users can access artists' pages and audio- and videoclips. There also are artist interviews, as well as "Music City" news.

Holliday says there will be a premium put on getting up the "hottest and newest" music and videos.

"We're also looking to put some smaller files up," he says, noting the sometimes great lengths of time it can take to download longer video files—up to 15 minutes with a 14.4 modem.

That same recognition is going into the site as a whole, Holliday says, with plans for a text-only option. "We want people to be able to access information even if they can't get all the jazzy graphics and video."

Holliday also has put up a complete label catalog and will soon post an 800 number for direct ordering.

Sci-Fi Themes Push Interactive's Outer Limits Virgin's 'Daedalus Encounter' Explores New Markets

NEW YORK—Science fiction has, as someone once said of beezball, been very good to CD-ROM developers. So it's no surprise to see a strong slate of such themed releases on tap for spring and summer. "It translates well, and it's familiar," says John Evershed, co-founder and executive producer of San Francisco-based software developer Mechadeus, whose forthcoming "Daedalus Encounter" fills the sci-fi bill nicely. "In the early days at least, it leaves you free to concentrate on developing the title and not on having to jump that extra hurdle of explaining the actual concept to consumers."

"The Daedalus Encounter," which will have a worldwide launch in April for PC, Macintosh, and 3DO platforms via Virgin Interactive Entertainment, goes well beyond formula, however, mixing in the equivalent of a feature-length film (with more than two hours of video) into a story line of eye-popping graphics that enables the user to explore strange worlds—all the while struggling to avert destruction.

Starring as one of the two live-action characters with whom the player interacts while navigating the story is the actress Tia Carrere. Evershed believes her presence will help his three-CD title stand out in a crowded sci-fi pack and also bring in a wider audience than might otherwise buy a CD-ROM game.

"She appeals to a younger audience and also a broader one than that core CD-ROM gamer market," says Russell Kelban, VP of marketing for Virgin Interactive. "We see this as a perfect product for all the new users who have come into the market this year."

Virgin Interactive, which acquired the title as part of a larger deal to buy the software publishing assets of Media Vision, will therefore take an aggressive approach to marketing it, Kelban says, including sending a promotional trailer and posters to retailers and holding a "Hollywood-type" premiere this spring.

Mechadeus, meanwhile, will be busy working on its next title. "A comedy," says Evershed. "We'll see how that goes."

CD-ROM Promo Tied To Vid, TV

IN A DEVELOPMENT WORLD in which content is king and creative properties are being co-developed for multiple platforms from films to games to books, it makes sense that promotions for the various products also would become increasingly intertwined.

Following on the heels of last year's ground-breaking home-video/CD-ROM cross-promotions for "Blown Away" and other film-based properties (in which trailers on the videos teased the game, and games sported trailers for the videos), Compton's NewMedia is trying a promotional triple play for its "Secrets Of Stargate" CD-ROM—linking the interactive title not only with the home-video release of the film from which it is derived, but with a related TV show as well.

Compton's is teaming with NBC and LIVE Home Video for the cross-promotion, which is keyed to the March 14 home-video release of the MGM/UA film "Stargate" by LIVE Home Video. Compton's CD-ROM "The Secret Of Stargate" offers a behind-the-scenes look at the making of that film; it launched last October in conjunction with the film's theatrical release.

The home-video release will contain a two-minute trailer at the beginning, highlighting both Compton's CD-ROM and the NBC-TV show "Earth 2," which shares a similar science-fiction theme. In turn, a 60-second ad teasing the release of the home video will air during the TV show. Other links include a sweepstakes promoting the TV show and video, for which Compton's will provide 1,000 copies of its CD-ROM as prizes, cross-teases on point-of-purchase materials, and joint radio advertisements.

ACTIVISION IS TARGETING a decidedly undertargeted demographic—women—as part of its extensive marketing campaign for the interactive strategy game "Shanghai: Great Moments."

The campaign, which kicks off in March, will include a direct-marketing effort keyed to "female-targeted" TV stations, including Lifetime and Nick at Night, according to Activision CEO Bobby Kottick. Beginning in April, 60-second spots for the game will appear on those stations and will include an 800 phone number that viewers can call to order either a free demo of the CD-ROM or a discounted copy of the complete game ($39.95 plus S&H, rather than $49.95). Those who buy the free demo also get a $10 rebate coupon toward purchase.

The free demo also will be made available through a tie-in with Keebler; those sending in two bar codes from select bags of the snacker's Chacho's Tortilla Chips will get the demo and a $5 rebate coupon good toward purchase of the game.

Select female computer buyers also will be targeted in a direct-mail promotion, through which the demo disc and a $10 coupon will be sent to them automatically beginning in April.

The game, which combines live-action and animation, is hosted by "Joy Luck Club" actress Rosalind Chao.

Shelf Talk: Turner Cross-Promotions 130 Laser Scans: Laser Beam Winners 132

PICTURE THIS

By Seth Goldstein

TIME'S UP: In digital videodiscs as in life, you can't be too rich or too thin. Or too outgoing.

That's the impression we took away from demonstrations of the Sony/Philips and Toshiba/Time Warner systems. The rival DVD formats were displayed separately to the New York trade press in recent weeks, and if success goes to the one with the smoothest pitch, Toshiba/Time Warner was the clear winner.

Sony's off-the-record presentation included comparisons that showed its DVD equal or superior to laserdisc and VHS tape. But many of the details and much of the confidence that underpinned the T/TW talk were lacking to this observer.

T/TW brass, led by Warner Home Video president Warren Lieberfarb, craved publicity, creating for the moment the aura of a retail winner. At the core of their pitch: T/TW's .6 millimeter disc, half the thickness of the Sony/Philips CD, outperforms anything else, a point underscored in the DVD-vs.-laserdisc comparison.

The disc's chief drawback is that it's flimsy, so T/TW decided to bond on a second CD—"and that added another 5 gigabytes" of recording capacity, said Toshiba's Koji Hase. Lieberfarb suggested using the added 135 minutes for the bottom half of "an old-time double bill."

Disc production, illustrated by a brief video, wasn't seen as a problem. "We have made several hundred thousand," said WEA Manufacturing's Joe Vayda.

T/TW presenters emphasized repeatedly that thinness is a virtue, in terms of audio and video clarity, and that their version of the future will keep retail in shape for the coming battle against over-the-air services. Lieberfarb said that while home video was secure in the U.S., there were signs in Europe that hi-tech television was hurting store traffic.

Lieberfarb claimed DVD had been designed to fit into "the look and sound" of TV "15 years from now." How do Time Warner and Toshiba know they're tracking the correct specifications and price? Interviews with 1,600 households helped, he said.

Sony and Philips presumably have done consumer research, but they're not talking about results—feeding the suspicion that consumers will have to evaluate one DVD format.

NCI Survey Cites Caption Glitches Are Vid Suppliers Aware Of Complaints?

BY EILEEN FITZPATRICK

LOS ANGELES—The hearing impaired can have trouble communicating with others in the everyday world. Now it appears the National Captioning Institute is having similar trouble with the home video industry.

Despite an NCI survey that indicates 61% of deaf and hearing-impaired consumers experience problems with captions, program suppliers and duplicators say they rarely, if ever, receive complaints. Their position runs counter to that of Blockbuster, which has bought 2,500 caption decoders from NCI on the strength of the survey. Neither party will discuss the transaction's dollar value (decoders normally sell for $130 apiece).

Demand attracted Blockbuster. Based on the data it collected, NCI projects closed-caption consumers among the 25 million deaf and hearing impaired rent cassettes 60 million times a year and purchase 9 million copies of the 5,000 titles treated since 1981. Yet few copies perform properly, often exhibiting no captions or ones that are illegible on screen, NCI says.

But suppliers or duplicators maintain the problem isn't as severe as the survey indicates. "We can guarantee a product through our quality control systems," says a source at duplicator Rank Video Services, which services Columbia TriStar, Paramount, FoxVideo, LIVE, and MCA/Universal.

"We've never heard about a complaint," he adds, "but that doesn't mean there aren't a few once in a while." Finished copies are checked at least twice and often three times, according to duplicators.

Vendors agree they rarely hear about closed-captioning glitches. "Occasionally, we have a problem and give a consumer a new tape when it's reported," says MCA/Universal Home Video VP of technical operations Mike Fitzgerald. "We haven't had that many complaints, and it's certainly not 60%."

Others such as Buena Vista, LIVE, and Turner don't know what NCI is referring to. "I think if our product had problems, we'd hear about it," says Buena Vista Home Video VP of publicity and special events Tania Moloney. "Consumers aren't shy about calling us about a number of things," including this issue.

NCI's conclusions were drawn from a direct-mail questionnaire sent in December to 595 randomly selected hearing-impaired consumers. Each had access to closed-captioned programs either through a set-top decoder or a display-ready television set.

Executive director of public relations Don Thieme, defending the survey, says NCI receives about a dozen letters each month specifically complaining about video problems. "I don't find it shocking that there's a disparity between our survey and supplier comments," he says. "But the survey puts hard quantitative numbers on what we've always known."

Blockbuster will have a chance to verify the conclusions. Its program, which began Feb. 1, allows consumers to test closed-caption titles on decoders installed in 2,500 stores. The service will be advertised through a promotional spot scheduled to run on in-store monitors.

Suppliers have a vested interest in monitoring the rate of in-store failures. They pay NCI an average of $2,000 per title to close-caption a video and another $300 for the master copy, which goes to the duplicator.

Closed captioning also is done by Los Angeles-based Captions, which did not take part in the NCI survey. Captions knows of consumers who have reported problems. "Some say the video box said it would be captioned and it wasn't," says sales manager Robert Troy. "But it doesn't happen that often, and it could have happened on a tape they rented three years ago." Troy says he was unaware of the NCI study.

The root of the problem may lie in consumer VCRs. Fitzgerald speculates that the general wear and tear on any VCR can throw off tracking specifications required to view closed captions. "If the tracking specs start to come out, it does make a difference," he says, in turn making on-screen images hard to read.

'Kids First!' List Of Preferred Vids Aids Retailers

BY TRUDI MILLER ROSENBLUM

NEW YORK—If Disney can establish a brand name in children's entertainment, would it be presumptuous of the Coalition For Quality Children's Video to do the same?

Not according to the Coalition, which says its "Kids First!" directory of recommended titles from 22 vendors is just the ticket for retailers seeking to generate more sales in that genre. And retailers are agreeable to that suggestion. Suncoast Motion Picture Co. will begin a "Kids First!" campaign in 375 stores starting April 1.

The Suncoast move follows on the heels of a Kmart test of the campaign, promised implementation of the "Kids First" program by several video specialists, and discussions between the Coalition and the Trans World Music chain.

Turner's Pumping Up Its Promotional Focus

TURNING UP THE PROMOS: After offering such mundane product as made-for-cable movies and CNN news specials, Turner Home Entertainment releases are becoming a hot commodity for cross-promotions.

Within the last six months, Turner has nabbed an exclusive with Target Stores for distribution of "In Search Of Dr. Seuss," and a deal with Mattel Toys for a Scarlett O'Hara Barbie doll, among others.

Next month, Kellogg's Cereals will advertise Turner's "Covert Bailey's Smart Exercise" on more than 30 million boxes of Special K and will feature the title, due in stores March 7, in its advertising.

In an offbeat March promotion, exclusive to Wal-Mart, Madison Avenue Lighting & Fan Co. will give away a "Flintstones" cassette with the purchase of its newly created "Flintstone" fan.

"Some of the promotions have been unusual, but we'll take the business anytime, as long as it doesn't conflict with our retailers," says Turner director of marketing Vito Mandato.

According to Mandato, one of the reasons Turner has pumped up its promotional focus is that the company is better equipped to pursue opportunities. "Now we have the people, the product, and the ability to get these deals," he says.

Since Turner hired executive VP Stuart Snyder in 1993, the home video division has grown from a skeleton staff of about five to more than 40. Distributing New Line Home Video product has also improved Turner's profile.

New Line handles marketing of its own titles. As the selling agent, Turner is riding on the success of Jim Carrey's "The Mask," expected to continue with Carrey's "Dumb And Dumber" this summer.

It's not bad for a company whose biggest hit at one time was highlights of the Gulf War.

DON'T BLINK: Saban Home Entertainment has pulled 10 titles from "The Mighty Morphin Power Rangers" series off the market.

Retailers only had until Feb. 17 to put in their last orders for "Power Rangers," volumes 1-5, and "The Green Ranger Series," volumes 1-5. To date, Saban says it has sold a total of more than 14 million units at $12.95 suggested list.

Saban is running a monthlong "last chance to collect" consumer promotion to boost sales of the departing episodes. Consumers who purchase any two of the titles will receive a free Power Rangers action figure, valued at $7, by mail.

Proof-of-purchase tabs and the cash-register receipt must be postmarked by March 15. An in-store merchandiser touting the promotion is available.

Saban isn't saying how long the titles will be on moratorium, but a new Power Ranger series will arrive in stores March 28. Called "The White Ranger Series," it includes "Goldar's Vice-Versa," "Where There's Smoke There's Fire," and "Rocky Just Wants To Have Fun." The price remains $12.95.

"BIG" DEAL: FoxVideo is rushing to cash in on the second wave of "Forrest Gump" fever, expected to heat up around Oscar time and the movie's video release April 27.

For a limited time, Fox will offer "Big" for $9.98. The movie earned "Gump" star Tom Hanks his first Oscar nomination back in 1983. Dealers have until April 3 to order at this price, with the street date set for April 25.

Paramount Home Video has priced "Gump," a shoo-in Oscar winner, at $22.95 suggested list.

Also due from FoxVideo, on April 4, is "The Pagemaster," at $22.98. The film was a major disappointment for both the studio and producer Turner Pictures, which spent about five years on the project, FoxVideo is using corporate synergy to generate sales for the animated/live-action feature, which has grossed $12 million in the U.S. since its November release.

Consumers who purchase the title and either "Baby's Day Out," "Ferngully," or "Once Upon A Forest" will receive a $5 rebate from Fox. And packed inside each "Pagemaster" cassette is a $5 rebate for the video game of the same name and for Fox Interactive's "The Tick."

In addition, "The Pagemaster" cassettes will offer a sneak preview of "The Mighty Morphin Power Rangers," a Fox property scheduled for release this summer.

PIRATES WALK THE PLANK: Year-end statistics from the Motion Picture Assn. of America show a 40% increase in pirated videocassette seizures.

In 1994, the organization nabbed 425,896 cassettes and 2,352 recorders, a 90% increase over 1993. Convictions were up from 164 in 1993 to 244, and court-ordered restitutions rose to $412,959, five times the 1993 total.

While crediting law enforcement agencies, MPAA president Jack Valenti also recognized the trade organization's "Bounty For Pirates" program, which was instituted last July.

It rewards up to $15,000 to people who tip off the MPAA about illegal duping labs, provided the leads result in the subsequent arrest and conviction of suspected pirates.

Video Previews

EDITED BY CATHERINE APPLEFELD

MUSIC

John Denver, "A Portrait," Cherry Lane Video (Hal Leonard), 60 minutes, $19.95.

A beautifully paced mix of behind-the-scenes narrative, archival performance clips, and music videos. It should please those who like the singer's music and his politics. To frame it all, Denver faces the camera with the Rockies at his back and tells about his early attraction to music and the stories behind such songs as "Rocky Mountain High," "Matthew," "Calypso," "Flying For Me," "Raven's Child" (inspired by the Exxon Valdez disaster and what it showed "about the arrogance of power and greed"), and "What Are We Building Weapons For" (which Denver calls "the best piece of work I've done in my career"). He also gives the background of his first music video, "Don't Close Your Eyes Tonight," and of his recording and video of Jimmy Webb's "Postcards From Paris." Lightening up the project are old clips of the then haystack-haired balladeer doing comic routines from his TV specials with Dick Van Dyke, George Gobel, Doris Day, and the Muppets. Denver also alludes to an upcoming movie and a tour of China and the Far East. The video soundtrack opens with "Annie's Song" and closes with "Leavin' On A Jet Plane."

"Classical Encounters: Mozart—A Little Night Music," RCA Victor (212-930-4941), 83 minutes, $12.98.

CHILDREN'S

"Madeline At Cooking School," Golden Book Video, 25 minutes, $12.95. This latest "Madeline" release is a pure culinary delight. When the cook who cares for the feisty little French girl and her friends falls ill, the girls attempt to keep the kitchen running as usual—much to the chagrin of an esteemed lunch guest who enrolls them in the cooking school. After plenty of humorous trial and error, they become skilled in the art of fine French cuisine.

Beside learning all the baker's secrets, Madeline displays the ultimate in good taste when she opts to fail her final when she gives her prize bird to a pair of poor children who ask for a handout rather than to her teacher to be judged.

"Nursery Raps With Mama Goose," Golden Book Video, 25 minutes, $12.95.

This rapping, rhyming, primarily animated take on 13 different classic nursery rhymes is hip in every sense of the word. Conceived by the Cole trio of Natalie and her twin sisters Casey and Timolin, program presents a unique means of hitting home such children's titles as "Humpty Dumpty," "Jack And Jill," "Peter Piper," "Simple Simon," and more, via upbeat music videos. Although the video is geared toward a preschool audience, older children and parents may find themselves tapping along to the beat.

HEALTH/FITNESS

"Kathy Smith's Power Step Workout," BodyVision, 60 minutes, $19.95.

A full-bodied workout that demands at least a moderate fitness level and agility with the step accompaniment, Smith's "Power Step" program was created to enable participants to burn even more fat and calories than the average step routine. The incorporation of jumps, hops, and—if the home audience feels up to it—running into the workout allows for maximum creativity and muscle power. Although viewers have the option of toning the routine down—power stepping or doing a regular step program—the moves still require a pretty fit participant. For those who are up to the challenge, a fun and results-oriented workout awaits.

DOCUMENTARY

"In Service To America: A History Of Women In The Military," Dane Hansen Productions (800-546-8871), 60 minutes, $29.95.

The story of women in the military extends from the infamous Molly Pitcher of the Revolutionary War through the women who served during Desert Storm and continue to serve in all branches of the Armed Services. This comprehensive documentary includes a complete scrapbook of archival photos and films accentuated by interviews with historians, experts, and a myriad of military women who share their own accounts and insights. Also available from Dane Hansen are "We Were There," the dramatic account of the Jewish liberation after World War II as told by the liberators themselves, and "Forgotten Heroes," a documentary of the U.S. Marine Corps in Korea.

"The Native Americans," Turner Home Entertainment (404-827-2890), $9.98 each, $59.98 for six-video set.

An overview of the history and current status of the 500-plus Native American tribes makes for both an exhaustive and exhilarating agenda. Archival footage is used to recreate the story of various triumphs and struggles, but the most compelling testimony comes via members of the tribes themselves who share personal memories and stories in candid interviews. To make the subject more approachable, Turner divides the tribes into different geographic regions of the country, each of which is covered in one of the six videos.

INSTRUCTIONAL

"First Time Home Buyers Manual: A Financial Break Down Of The Entire Home Buying Process," National Real Estate Productions Inc., 60 minutes.

Geared expressly toward the 20- and 30-something generation, this nuts-and-bolts guide to purchasing a first home is highly informative and easy to understand. A representative from a New Jersey mortgage company imparts his knowledge of the current real estate market and the best ways to obtain a good mortgage, while a fictional couple demonstrates what it goes through to get there. The narrator covers a gamut of home-buying issues, from the basics of defining the principal and interest components of a mortgage, to the difference between a condo and a co-op, to explanations of points, down payments, and mortgage insurance. It's time well spent.

"Children Saving Children: Drowning Emergencies," Valiant Educational Videos (800-266-2159), approximately 20 minutes, $19.95.

First in a new series aimed at imparting critical lifesaving skills to children, often the only ones around in times of crisis, concerns itself with what to do in drowning emergencies—specifically, when another child stops breathing due to a swimming mishap. Following guidelines published by the American Medical Association, the program outlines and demonstrates specific situations (a preteen who doesn't know how to swim falling in the pool, a toddler panicking in deep water, etc.) that lead to other children performing CPR and other forms of rescue breathing. The training is critical; unfortunately, it is not portrayed in a manner that will particularly appeal to its intended audience.

Lucasfilm, Voyager Win Laser Beams

LASER BEAM WINNERS: The Laser Disc Assn. has given its 1995 Laser Beam Awards to two recipients: the Lucasfilm THX laserdisc program and Voyager's Criterion Collection.

Laser Beams go to people or companies who "keep the light focused on laserdisc," says the LDA. The THX quality-control program has helped boost the format in both performance consistency and popularity with consumers. And Criterion has led the way in creating laser special editions, which have become important cultural contributions in their own right, as well as significant extra business for the studios.

Lucasfilm and Criterion will be honored at a special ceremony March 1 at the Shutters On The Beach Hotel in Santa Monica, Calif. Film critic Leonard Maltin was last year's Laser Beam honoree.

PIONEER will launch LIVE's "Star-gate" (THX, AC-3, widescreen or pan-scan, $44.98) on laserdisc with Dolby multichannel sound on March 14. The sci-fi thriller with James Spader and Kurt Russell offers Dolby Surround stereo on standard laserdisc players and five channels of digital audio plus a subwoofer on the new generation of AC-3 players.

Laserdisc keeps sounding better and better, as evidenced by the first AC-3 title on the market, Paramount's "Clear And Present Danger" (THX, wide or pan-scan, $44.98). While the sound and picture of the Tom Clancy thriller, starring Harrison Ford, James Earl Jones, Willem Dafoe, and Anne Archer, are outstanding with a regular laser setup, the audio is even more powerful if you've got an AC-3 player and receiver.

REMASTERED FAVORITES: Pioneer is releasing remastered versions of 10 movies on disc, all in wide or pan-scan. "An Officer And A Gentleman," "Witness," "Running Man," and "Air America" were set for January; "Ordinary People," "Heaven Can Wait," "Up In Smoke," "Terms Of Endearment," "Fabulous Baker Boys," and "Reds" are on the slate for February. All of the above will list for $39.98, except for the $44.98 "Reds."

PRICE REDUCTIONS: In more news from Pioneer, the laser distributor has introduced a new "midline" catalog of low-priced discs, with most set at $24.95. To kick it off, prices have been reduced permanently on more than 80 movie titles, including "Bob Roberts," "Carrie," "The Elephant Man," "Kafka," "Rambling Rose," "Reservoir Dogs," "Straight Out Of Brooklyn," "Two

by Chris McGowan

Jakes," and "Wayne's World." Pioneer says it will add more titles to the midline catalog every two months.

COLUMBIA TRISTAR will bow the comedy "Blankman" (wide, $34.95), with Damon Wayans and Robin Givens, on March 7. And don't miss these recent noteworthy releases: Mike Nichols' "Wolf," with Jack Nicholson and Michelle Pfeiffer (wide, $39.95); "Belle Epoque" (wide, $34.95); and "Germinal," with Gerard Depardieu (wide, $39.95).

MPI HOME VIDEO has released two TV-movie horror tales on laserdisc: "Frankenstein," with Robert Foxworth and Bo Svenson (1973, $34.95), and

"The Strange Case Of Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde," with Jack Palance and Denholm Elliot (1968, $34.95).

LUMIVISION's "Inside Hawaiian Volcanoes" (CAV, $29.95) is a notable new addition to the Denver-based label's "Smithsonian Laserdisc Collection." This 25-minute featurette takes the viewer on a tour of lava flows and volcanoes and affords a rare glimpse of the inner workings of the Earth.

IMAGE launches "A Simple Twist Of Fate," with Steve Martin (wide, $39.99), and "Wes Craven's New Nightmare," with an audio commentary by director Wes Craven (wide, extras, $39.99), on March 28. Also coming this spring: a special edition of "The Day The Earth Stood Still," an uncut "Chushingura" (wide, $69.99), and a "Gunga Din" collector's edition (extras, $59.99) with an extensive supplementary section. Woody Allen's "Bullets Over Broadway" has been postponed until late May.

'KIDS FIRST!' GUIDES VID RETAILERS

time, "Is this a good movie for kids?" or "What do you recommend?," says Suncoast president Gary Ross. "So for us, this is a consumer program that the customers have asked for, although not necessarily by name. It comes down to being able to offer an alternative choice for kids' viewing, helping the customer understand that these are acceptable, nonviolent titles." He expects the campaign to become a permanent program.

The campaign is being underwritten by National Video Resources, an initiative of the Rockefeller Foundation that helps high-quality productions gain greater visibility in the marketplace.

Suncoast's participation represents a triumph for the nonprofit Coalition, formed in Santa Fe, N.M., in 1991 to identify outstanding children's titles and create merchandising campaigns to allow parents to easily recognize these titles in stores (Billboard, Jan. 29, 1994). "This is the first time that a national retail chain has made all of the 'Kids First!' titles easily available to the consumer," says Coalition president Ranny Levy.

The value of the "Kids First!" program is that it draws attention to lesser-known quality titles, Levy says. "This is a very hit-driven business, so consequently many fabulous children's programs fall by the wayside.

"So if it's not a feature film, if it's not on TV, if it doesn't have Mickey Mouse-ears on the box, parents don't know what it is. The 'Kids First!' project gives 'brandedness' to those titles that would get lost in the marketing jungle."

The Suncoast program has several facets. Ten-by-8-foot signs in the children's section will feature the "Kids First!" logo and the phrase "Look for this symbol for quality children's video." Pamphlets will be available explaining the program and listing every title endorsed by the Coalition, with recommended ages and price information. Endorsed titles in-store will be flagged with a "Kids First!" sticker.

Suncoast did not separate the "Kids First!" titles into a special section because that would be too confusing for customers, says Archie Benike, managing director of marketing. "Most of these titles are in categories that have already been clearly defined in our stores, whether it be the family section, the animation section, the educational, or the spiritual. People are used to those familiar sections. This way, they can browse the way they always do, but they'll notice the 'Kids First!' sticker."

Separating the videos would also be confusing because, as Ross points out, "There are many other acceptable kids titles that are not necessarily part of the 'Kids First!' program, such as Disney."

The list is not all-inclusive because it is limited to titles that studios submit for review. "I don't know why [Disney] hasn't submitted anything. Maybe they feel they don't need to, since Disney already has such a strong presence in the marketplace," says Levy.

Of the 375 titles endorsed by the Coalition, Suncoast stores on average carry about 60%. Benike says, "It varies from store to store, based on each store's sales and demographics." Generally, the titles not carried are "from smaller vendors we don't have contact with, or are titles not big enough for placement in all our stores," Ross says. All "Kids First!" videos will be available via Suncoast's 24-hour toll-free number.

"Kids First!" is not a familiar name to most parents, but header cards and pamphlets will educate them about the program, says Benike. "The more exposure we give it, the more the brand recognition will come. I think the strength of the program will be the catalog of 'Kids First!' titles. It's a tool we can hand to them. They can take it home and look through it."

For its part, the Coalition will support the campaign with "a huge mailing" to consumer publications and parenting magazines, says Levy.

Levy is setting up similar programs with some independents around the country, including Salzer's in Ventura, Calif., and Plaza Video outside New York City. Last year, Kmart did a 30-day "Kids First!" trial program in 800 stores and plans to repeat it this fall, Levy says. She also is talking to Trans World Music about a possible campaign.

THIS WEEK...

Following just two weeks after the release of their first boxed set, Spanky and his gang are back with The Little Rascals: Volume 2 (ID2789CF; $124.99). This remastered set of rare Rascal's classics totals a whopping 431 minutes of non-stop laughs, all hosted by Leonard Maltin of TV's "Entertainment Tonight". And if it's laughs you're after, be sure and drop in on Ralph, Alice, Ed and Trixie for The Honeymooners: Volume 1 (8127-80; $124.98) from FoxVideo. This 5-Disc set features the first 19 episodes of the classic television comedy and will be followed by Volume 2 (8128-80; $124.98), which contains an additional 20 episodes!

On the subject of classics, the Criterion Collection CAV edition of Powell and Pressburger's acclaimed adaptation of The Red Shoes (CC1401L; $124.95) recently danced into stores; it's a winner! Featuring audio commentary from star Moira Shearer, director of photography Jack Cardiff (who personally supervised the transfer), Martin Scorsese and others, this stellar Technicolor epic contains all of the bonus extras that Criterion discs have become known for. It remains today, 47 years later, the definitive three-strip Technicolor production of all time...and a great story to boot!

LIFELINES

BIRTHS

Girl, Hannah Marie, to Dave and Brenda Witzig, Jan. 18 in Chicago. He is Midwest regional director for Cema.

Boy, Alexandre James, to Doug and Cheryl Breitbart, Jan. 30 in New York. He is president of Centurion Records, VP of CD-ROM company Cyber-tour Inc., and an entertainment attorney.

Girl, Grace Catherine, to Tim and Monica Fought, Feb. 1 in Indianapolis. He is account executive at WFMS Indianapolis.

Girl, Hannah Catherine, to Billy and Cathy Dean, Feb. 7 in Nashville. He is a country artist on Liberty Records.

MARRIAGES

Chris Poteat to Michele Linsalata, Feb. 18 in Atlanta. He is warehouse manager for Uni Distribution there. She is senior assistant manager for Blockbuster Music.

DEATHS

Art Taylor, 65, Feb. 6 in New York. Taylor was a pioneering bebop drummer (see Blue Notes, page 40). He began his career in the late '40s in New York, joining a group that included Sonny Rollins, Jackie McLean, and Percy Heath. In the '50s and early '60s, he recorded approximately 100 sessions for the Blue Note and Prestige labels, performing with such jazz greats as Charlie Parker, John Coltrane, Bud Powell, Coleman Hawkins, Miles Davis, Thelonious Monk, Art Farmer, Gene Ammons, Donald Byrd, and Stanley Turrentine. He is heard on many celebrated albums including Coltrane's "Giant Steps" and Davis' "Miles Ahead." He also led groups and recorded under his own name.

He moved to France in 1963 and lived there until 1970, when he moved to Belgium. During this period, he published the book "Notes And Tones," a collection of interviews with other jazz musicians. He returned to New York in 1980, and in the late '80s he performed regularly with his band Taylor's Waiters, which recorded for the Enja and Verve labels. The band featured young artists including Jacky Terrason, Marc Cary, Abraham Burton, and Willie Williams. Taylor is survived by his daughter, Sylvie.

5,000 Religious Broadcasters Meet Times Have Changed, But Message Hasn't

■ BY DEBORAH EVANS PRICE

NASHVILLE—Beliefs mingled with business, and tradition met technology, as thousands of registrants gathered at the 52nd annual National Religious Broadcasters Convention at the Opryland Hotel in Nashville Feb. 11-14. Radio and television broadcasters from around the world met for educational sessions, committee meetings, a sampling of the latest in Christian entertainment, and to check out one another's wares in the exhibit hall.

The theme of the gathering was "An Unchanging Message To A Changing World," and educational seminars covered a wide range of topics, including management ethics, selling solutions vs. selling spots, the state of Christian music, legal issues that concern Christian broadcasters, and the new information superhighway and its effects on religious broadcasters.

'The technology is continually changing, and we need to stay on the cutting edge of that'

"One of the biggest things we're seeing is the increased feeding of programs via satellite," NRB chairman Robert Straton said of the changes religious broadcasters are making in their practices. "Some of the largest broadcasts like 'Focus On The Family,' which is now on about 2,200 stations, and many, many others are sending the programs via satellite feed . . . I think with the refinement of radio—with digital and DAT and the cleaner sound—it's becoming more and more evident we want to keep up with the industry and have our programs as clean as a whistle. I think the industry is pushing us to make a better product."

Concern for creating a better product by keeping up with all the current technological advances was also evident in the exhibit hall, where NRB director of conventions and exhibits Michael Glenn reported a resurgence in broadcast-equipment vendors. According to Glenn, approximately 20% of the exhibit hall (41 booths) consisted of equipment manufacturers and suppliers. One quarter of those exhibitors were newcomers to NRB.

"There's a lot of talk about all the things that are happening digitally, people making conversions from tape to digital automation and satellite systems," Morningstar Radio Network program director Rich Tiner said. "There's a big buzz about people coming of age technologically."

Greg Johnson, program director at WCVO Columbus, Ohio, agreed.

"Our own station just recently advanced into the computer operation," he said. "We're about halfway there . . . Sound quality is a large concern of mine. The technology is continually changing, and we need to stay on the cutting edge of that and stay up to date as much as possible."

MONEY A PRIMARY CONCERN

To be able to afford that technology, money is a prime concern to religious broadcasters, and several of the education sessions dealt with sales and fund raising.

Radio members comprise 73% of the NRB's 818 members, and the majority of those are noncommercial stations. For the benefit of those broadcasters, there was a noncommercial round-table discussion that addressed fund-raising and management issues. For commercial stations there were two "Mini Sales Boot Camp" sessions: one titled "Selling Solutions vs. Selling Spots" and the other billed as "Overcoming Format Objections to Get the Sale."

During the latter session, Salem Radio's Bob Bounds urged sales people to be competitive with secular stations by utilizing the same tools and communicating on the same level. "We need to encourage our sales people to speak the same language—using terms like sales point, self talker, [and] back list inventory," he said. "If our sales people aren't speaking the same language, they won't get the time of day" from potential advertisers.

In addition to educational seminars and exhibit-hall action, this year's NRB participants were entertained by some of Christian music's top talent, including Ricky Skaggs, Bill Gaither, Janet Paschal, Susie Luchsinger, Friends IV, Michael W. Smith, and Phillips, Craig & Dean. In addition to the music offerings, there were numerous guest speakers including Jack Hayford, Elisabeth Elliot, and Dr. Adrian Rogers, who provided a stirring, opening-night message encouraging broadcasters to stand by the truth.

NO PLATFORM FOR PRESIDENT

One speaker not present was President Clinton, and the NRB made it pointedly clear he was not invited. A statement issued to the press read: "In recent years, it has been the decision of the National Religious Broadcasting (NRB) leadership to invite the President of the United States to address the annual convention. This has always been a nonpartisan choice, with both Republican and Democratic presidents participating. However, for the 1995 convention, it is the decision of the NRB executive committee that no invitation will be extended. During a White House briefing with Baptist leaders and religion journalists in October, President Bill Clinton reiterated his position on the issues of abortion and homosexuality by claiming the Bible is 'ambiguous' about them. Statements such as these reaffirm our decision to withhold an invitation to address our convention from the President . . . We cannot give a platform to a leader who so aggressively supports and puts forth policies and positions which are blatantly contrary to scriptural views."

Participants at NRB obviously represented broadcasting's most conservative side, but in talking to attendees, it was obvious the theme of the convention rang true—the message being conveyed doesn't change, but the messengers are moving into the '90s.

Preregistration was up significantly from 1,900 last year to 2,400 at the same point this year, and on-site registration was also brisk. At the close of the day on Monday, paid registration was at 3,969, and NRB officials expected total attendance to top 5,000 by the end of the convention.

Next year's National Religious Broadcasters Convention will be held Feb. 3-6 in Indianapolis.

Top 40 Is Top Listener Format In Survey News, Talk, N/T Categories Round Out The Top Four

■ BY PHYLLIS STARK

NEW YORK—For major-market radio listeners, top 40/rhythm appears to be the format of choice. A new study of national format trends, conducted by Chicago-based ratings company AccuRatings, found that format to be the favorite among nearly 40,000 major-market listeners surveyed.

It was followed in the study by the news and talk formats, which scored second and third place, respectively, and news/talk (a separate format that combines elements of both), which was the fourth most popular among the 12-plus audience. Rounding out the top 10 were: mainstream R&B, Spanish, top 40/mainstream, oldies, modern rock, and album rock.

If the news, talk, and N/T categories had been combined, the total share would have been the top format in the study. Similarly, if mainstream country and new country had not been divided into separate genres, the country format would have placed third in ranking. As separate entities, mainstream country ranked No. 11, while new country was No. 18.

Not surprisingly, the AccuRatings study found the burgeoning '70s oldies format and the much-ballyhooed modern rock format to be the fastest growing of the 35 formats tracked for audience preference.

Broken down into individual demographic groups, top 40/rhythm remained No. 1 among teens and 18- to 24-year-olds, but relinquished that slot to Spanish in the 25-34 demo, oldies in the 35-44 and 45-54 demos, and news in the 55-64 and 65-plus age groups.

The study examined radio-listening behavior, by format, of consumers in eight of the top 10 radio markets during the summer 1994 AccuRatings survey period. The markets included in the study are New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Detroit, Dallas, and Boston. The AccuRatings data is based on interviews with 39,980 radio listeners.

The National Format Trends study was set to be presented, with a limited run of 200 copies distributed Feb. 16, at the Radio Advertising Bureau conference in Dallas.

Radio One Launches Two-Satellite Modern Rock Format

LOS ANGELES—Avon, Colo.-based Radio One is embarking on an aggressive marketing campaign to potential affiliates for its 24-hour modern rock format called Format One, which officially bowed in October. The company also is gearing up for the debut of its new hot country format in April.

Radio One originally syndicated a 24-hour album alternative format, but opted to flip to modern rock because of the format's growth potential, says Radio One managing partner Cliff Gardiner.

"We did a good bit of research, and it looked like alternative rock is really gaining in popularity faster than AAA," he says.

The format's core artists are R.E.M., U2, Sting, Pearl Jam, and Talking Heads.

Here's a sample afternoon-drive hour: "Bang And Blame," R.E.M.; "Love My Way," Psychedelic Furs; "Push," Stone Temple Pilots; "Under The Bridge," Red Hot Chili Peppers; "Hold My Hand," Hootie & the Blowfish; "Walk On The Ocean," Toad The Wet Sprocket; "No Excuses," Alice In Chains; "Possession," Sarah McLachlan; "People Are People," Depeche Mode; and "Walking On The Moon," the Police.

"This month we're starting to market to affiliates, and we're getting a much better response with the alternative offering," Gardiner says.

The advantage Format One has over Major Network's modern rock offering "The Exxit" is that Format One has a second satellite to feed four to five localized custom bits to affiliates per hour, says Gardiner.

"It's the only way to really localize other stations," he says. "We charge a higher affiliate fee, but we also offer a menu with traffic, news, weather, commercial production, and we monitor transmitters."

Gardiner says if affiliates pick up all selections on the menu, the fee is approximately $4,000 a month.

Format One's five Colorado affiliates, all owned by Gardiner and positioned as "The Mountain," are KIDN Steamboat Springs, KKYY Gunnison, KSMT Breckenridge, KSNO Aspen, and KZYR Vail. The other two affiliates are KSKL-FM Sun Valley, Idaho, and KMGW Casper, Wyo.

As for the hot country format, it will be offered in the same way as the modern rock format with the second satellite feed for better localization.

Funkmaster Flexes Across U.S., Globe

Hot 97 DJ Covers Radio, Clubs, Studios & Charts

IT'S A RARE AIR personality who can say he's heard in this country's top two radio markets, all over the U.K., and in parts of Japan as well. Funkmaster Flex can rightfully make that claim.

A top-rated performance during his six-night-a-week DJ job at WQHT (Hot 97) New York led to a deal about six months ago to also host a two-hour Friday night show at sister station KPWR (Power 106) Los Angeles. That show is done live, via satellite, with popular KPWR morning men the Baka Boyz. The Power gig was quickly followed by deals for a twice-monthly show on the U.K.'s BBC radio network and a weekly show on Japan's Bay FM.

As if that wasn't enough to keep the 27-year-old talent busy, he also continues to be a popular club jock, a sought-after record producer, and a recording artist in his own right.

Under the moniker Funkmaster Flex & the Ghetto Celebs, he recently released his first single on Nervous Records, "Nuttin But Flavor," which also features Biz Markie, Charlie Brown from Leaders Of The New School, and Ol' Dirty Bastard from Wu-Tang Clan. He also has produced records for Rayvon, Simply-E, Funkdoobiest, missjones, and Christopher Williams.

In addition, he is working on a compilation album for Loud/RCA Records that will feature a mix of his live DJ work, licensed old school records, and new records from whom he calls "known artists" that he has produced. There is no release date yet for that unfinished project.

As a DJ, Flex is heard on Hot 97 from 10 p.m.-midnight Monday-Thursday, 10 p.m.-2 a.m. Friday, and 6-10 p.m. Saturday—and he's No. 1 in each one of those slots.

"When I came to New York in October 1993... the hip-hop audience that I spoke to on the street always told me they were only listening when Flex was on," says Hot 97 PD Steve Smith. "He had only been doing his weekend shifts. I immediately took him to six days a week... He's been a very strong weapon for Hot 97 in solidifying our hip-hop position."

Smith also says he relies on music advice from Flex, who spent two years doing A&R at Profile Records.

Funkmaster Flex got an inauspicious start in the business: carrying records for his idol Chuck Chillout at WRKS (Kiss FM) New York. He got his first break one day when Chillout couldn't make his shift and Flex was sent as his replacement. Flex says the station's then PD, Tony Gray, "didn't know me from a can of paint" and said "I could play for five minutes and if he liked it I could stay. I played three hours. It was probably the worst show I've ever done."

When Chillout moved to crosstown WBLS, he brought Flex with him to help spin records on his weekend show. But when both Chillout and Flex were fired, another idol, market legend Red Alert, hired Flex as a substitute host back at WRKS. There, he began to spin records at a lot of street parties and "a lot of rap clubs where the Spanish kids were going, like Club 2,000 and Emerald City." After building a solid base among the Hispanic audience, he was hired for a weekend shift at Hot 97, which was targeting a Hispanic audience at the time.

Today, Flex continues his club DJ work at places like the Palladium and Tunnel, believing that club experience enhances his radio shows.

"Most DJs... use the clubs as a stepping stone, and when they make it in their careers stop doing the clubs," Flex says. "I always thought that was a weak point. I increased my club [exposure] when I got the radio show. It makes you be so cutting edge. You get an instant reaction on a record."

He also is constantly doing his own informal audience research by working the phones on his radio show and talking to kids on the street about what they're listening to.

"I was one of the first rap DJs in years to really work the phones for the listeners," he says. "We open up the lines every 15 minutes for requests. It just keeps me real. As they want it, I know."

Flex chooses all the music on his radio show, and many of his picks might surprise people who have never heard him on the air.

"A lot of people have me down as a rap DJ, but I've had a lot of R&B and reggae records and ballads break out of my show. Especially in my weekday shows, I try to play a lot of different kinds of music," he says. "The format you play in the club is kind of what people want to hear on the radio. They don't want to hear too much of any one thing."

Flex cites Red Alert and Chillout as two of the most influential people in his life, alongside Hot 97's Smith and his manager, Jessica Rosenblum of Stress Entertainment, who "brought me up to the Bronx from downtown when no one was checking for me."

Ironically, Flex once again works at the same station as Red Alert, who moved to Hot 97 a few months ago. Flex says of his hero, "He's a great person, a person I've learned a lot from and a person with no ego. Even when we were directly in competition with each other when he was at Kiss and I was at Hot and on at the same time, we always played together in the clubs, and there was never any animosity."

NAB Lobbies For Minority Tax Certs

BY BILL HOLLAND

WASHINGTON, D.C.—With a House vote expected shortly, the National Assn. of Broadcasters has joined the NAACP and several other minority groups in the fight to save the FCC's minority tax-certificate program, already voted down in House committee.

House Democrats also plan to oppose the bill.

The program, which allows a company selling a broadcast or cable station to a minority to defer capital gains payments, could be abolished in a House vote after the Ways And Means Committee voted 26-10 to nix the commission program Feb. 8 in an unusually quick legislative fast-track procedure (Billboard, Feb. 18).

The measure must also pass in the Senate, where heavier opposition is predicted.

Before the program was initiated 17 years ago, minorities owned fewer than 40 radio stations; today, minorities own 260 radio stations.

The bill was hurriedly introduced after some lawmakers were angered by the high-profile sale of Viacom's cable systems for $2.3 billion to minority-run Mitgo. Viacom could save (and Uncle Sam would lose) about $400,000 in taxes in the deal.

The issue also attracted conservatives eager to kill programs they feel have "racial or ethnic criteria reminiscent of apartheid," as former FCC general counsel Bruce Fein, a conservative Republican, testified at the committee hearing.

If passed by the House, the repeal would be retroactive to Jan. 17, days before the Viacom/Mitgo deal was

NOT MANY FOLKS, especially songwriters, would suggest television today is particularly stimulating. But Dave Matthews found inspiration from a binge of channel surfing. The result, "What Would You Say," is No. 29 on the Modern Rock Chart. "It was kind of a reaction to a headache night," says Matthews. "Surfing my cable channels and finding no satisfaction, no redemption on the television, and imagining growing old and shriveling up and becoming a skeleton with a remote control in my hand... Just paging through. So it's kind of a thin song that really came out of a parade of images and noises."

For Matthews, channel surfing, no matter how unpleasant, is like a trip to the dentist: You can't avoid it. "It's a male thing; just flip and flip. I can do it for a couple hours. I could probably do it for 30 if I had to.

Then I'd fall asleep and wake up with a screeching headache as if I'd smoked all the bong in the world. But instead all I could say was I saw a couple seconds of 'I Love Lucy,' 'The Flintstones,' and a bunch of commercials."

"If I was trying to make too much sense out of it, I'd certainly be a liar." —Dave Matthews

The song, he says, "started as random images from the television. Then I made it into where I started thinking about just different pictures of people, different angles of people, and then I was wondering about the idea of putting yourself in other people's shoes. So it all tied up to a big soup; a three-and-a-half minute soup of sensible nonsense or nonsensible sense.

"If I was trying to make too much sense out of it, I'd certainly be a liar. A lot of the songs on the album have more of a line or a really solid feeling; more of a story or at least a feeling to portray. This song is much more schizophrenic."

Not that fans don't have endless interpretations of it. "I'm just waiting for a few more people to come up and tell me what they think the song is about. There's a lot of sex. People think a lot of things are about sex. Hopefully, someone will walk up to me and tell me 'What Would You Say' is about [having sex], and I'll be like, 'Oh, OK. Just like the rest of them. Great.'"

Talent Agent Indicted On Fraud Charge; Colo., Ind., Ratings Books To Be Reissued

Embattled Chicago radio talent agent Saul Foos has been indicted by a U.S. attorney and charged with defrauding clients—including scores of jocks—of $7.2 million through an age-old pyramid money scheme.

According to The Chicago Sun-Times, among those bilked of bucks were former WGCI-FM jock Tom Joyner, John Landecker of WJMK, Robert Murphy of WLS-FM, Fred Winston of WPNT-FM, and Irene Mojica of WGCI. As for recovering any money, Winston told the newspaper he'd probably recoup his lost $250,000 "when hell freezes over."

During a bankruptcy hearing last May, Foos admitted spending other people's money. "Before I knew it, it had gone on and on, and it was impossible to stop it," he said. (Billboard, June 4, 1994.)

Foos faces a maximum of 60 years in prison.

In other news, Arbitron announced it is reissuing two ratings books from the fall 1994 survey period: Denver and Lafayette, Ind.

The new Denver book, out Tuesday (21), will correct a diary assignment problem involving KXPX (the Peak). Diary mentions that should have been ascribed to KXPX went uncredited, says Arbitron VP of communications Thom Mocarsky, who notes that proper crediting procedures were followed, but that those procedures "didn't accommodate this situation."

In Lafayette, two diaries were incorrectly assigned to the wrong county designations, a result of what Mocarsky calls "human error."

In sad news, Bob Lindner, veteran newsmen of WMYF/WERZ Portsmouth, N.H., and his wife, Jacqueline, lost their home, possessions, and pet cat in a Feb. 8 fire that gutted the structure. Fire officials estimate the damage at $100,000.

A relief fund has been established for the Lindners. Donations can be sent to the Bob and Jacqueline Lindner Fire Fund, c/o First New Hampshire Bank, 154 Water St., Exeter, N.H. 03833.

PROGRAMMING: WMXV VP QUILTS

Ten-year WMXV (Mix 105) VP/programming Bob Dunphy has submitted his resignation. He will stay through the end of the book, and after that can be reached at 908-390-5679.

WABC New York PD John Mainelli has announced plans to exit the station in April to take what he calls a "major hiatus." No replacement has been named.

BISBEE

Sean Ross exits the PD job at WGCI-AM Chicago to join Billboard's sister publication, Airplay Monitor, as editor. He previously was A&R manager at Profile Records.

Matt Bisbee is upped from production director to the newly created position of director of programming and production at WLUP Chicago. He has been with the station for 16 years.

Maxx Myrick is upped from MD to PD at WVAZ (V103) Chicago. He replaces former OM Ron Atkins, now PD at WAMO Pittsburgh, where he succeeded Hurricane Dave Smith, who exited. Jamillah Muhammad moves from producer to assistant MD at V103.

Gary Moss, six-year PD at KWNR Las Vegas, exits to become PD at KIKK-FM Houston March 6. He succeeds Carl Geisler, who's now morning man there. KWNR VP/GM Mike Ginsburg is looking for a replacement and wants T&Rs.

Beverly Tilden, station manager at WEEI Boston, moves into the newly created position of director of sports marketing for WEEI and American Radio Sports. Her station manager duties will be divided. She will continue to handle marketing and is searching for a PD for WEEI.

WQFM Milwaukee PD Jim Murphy has resigned, and promotion director Terry Splide is filling in duties in the interim. The VP/GM slot also remains open following the departure of Al Brady Law last year.

New Honolulu adult alternative station KUCD began 24-hour operation Feb. 14. Mahlon Moore is handling mornings, while part-timer Sheila "Kailani" Miles is promoted to mid-days. KQMQ crosstown weekend Steve Hunter joins afternoons. KRTR crosstown evening host Mike Murry joins nights.

WKSE Buffalo, N.Y., PD Brian Burns moves to the PD chair at WDCG Raleigh, N.C. He replaces Brian Bridgeman, now at WEDJ Charlotte, N.C.

KTiM San Antonio, Texas, APD Cliff Tredway is upped to PD, replacing Jamie Hyatt, who exits.

KHTY (Y97) Santa Barbara, Calif., segues from mainstream top 40 to modern rock-leaning top 40.

NETWORK NEWS: "SMOOTH FM"

SW Networks was set to launch its newslines...

LOU MAHACEK is upped from GM of WXBM Pensacola, Ala., to VP of parent company Calendar Broadcasting. Dave Cobbs has been named station manager at WXBM.

BILL BRADY has been named station manager at WRKL White Plains, N.Y. He previously was OM/PD at WQBK-AM Albany, N.Y. Also, Kathleen Johansen joins WRKL and sister station WRGX (X107) as director of marketing and promotion. She previously held that position at WMTR-AM/WDHA Morristown, N.J.

JOE SCHWARTZ exits as VP/GM at WAFX/WNOE Norfolk, Va., to become CEO of Bengal Communications, owners of KHTZ-FM/KTEG-FM/KDZZ-AM Albuquerque, N.M.

ARSO RADIO CORP. is purchasing WRIO Ponce, Puerto Rico, from Family Broadcasting Inc. for $1.5 million. Arso, which also owns and operates the Salsoul Radio Network, WNEL/WPRM San Juan, Puerto Rico, and WIVA Mayagüez, Puerto Rico, begins operating WRIO under a local marketing agreement.

OTHER STATION SALES: WOLL West Palm Beach, Fla., from Lappin Communications Inc. to OmniAmerica Group, owner of crosstown WEAT-AM-FM, for an undisclosed price.

first 24-hour format, "Smooth FM," Feb. 16. The network claims the adult alternative format will have affiliates in 15 of the top 100 markets, including Seattle, Jacksonville, Fla., and Albany, N.Y., although call letters were not being disclosed at press time. It also claims to have signed overseas affiliates in Russia, Brazil, and the Caribbean.

"Smooth FM's" on-air lineup is morning host Haneen Hunter, formerly of KOAI Dallas; midday host Jim Fitzgerald, formerly of Unistar Radio Networks; WXRK New York's Maria Milito afternoons; night host Joe Davis, formerly of WHTZ and WYNY New York; and overnight host Ray Langert, formerly of WALK and WKJY Long Island, N.Y. Weekenders are Paul Cavalcante, formerly of WDRE Long Island; WQCD New York's Holly Lewis; Chris Frohne, formerly of WRCN Long Island; and Claire Stevens, formerly of WHTZ.

In other SW Networks news, KOAI PD Tom Miller says his station will not be carrying the adult alternative show "Personal Notes With Dave Koz" despite a press release issued recently by the network touting the Dallas station as an affiliate.

Lou Severine, former ABC Radio Network sales executive, has formed Global Media, a new marketing and sales company that will represent syndicated radio and television properties. The New York-based company will have offices in Los Angeles and in the Chicago/Detroit area. Initial clients include radio companies Global Satellite Network and Cutler Comedy Network.

PEOPLE: TOWER OF POWER

WBBM-FM (B96) Chicago morning show producer Ric Tower adds APD duties.

Former KYAK Anchorage, Alaska, PD Daryl Webster joins KMPS Seattle as MD/promotion coordinator. He replaces former MD/evening jock Carll Ann Strader, who exited. Also, Karen MacIssac is upped from promotion director to the newly created position of operations director at KMPS.

WHPT Tampa, Fla., part-time jock Mike Stuart is elevated to MD, replacing Kevin Mitchell, now at WRHQ Savannah, Ga.

WZZO Allentown, Pa., morning man Keith Moyer adds MD duties, replacing Todd Heft, now at WCCC Hartford, Conn.

WRCX Chicago afternoon host Terry Gibson is out. His replacement, WMMR Philadelphia late-night jock Chip Horanek (aka Lou Brutus), begins March 6.

WHTZ (Z100) New York's Chio The Hitman segues to nights at WIOQ (Q102) Philadelphia.

KKLQ San Diego APD/MD Ray Kalusa adds the same duties at sister KIOZ, replacing Peg Tollard, who exits.

Mike Ondayko moves from mornings at WRXR-FM Augusta, Ga., to mornings alongside the Byrd at WIYY (98 Rock) Baltimore. WRXR-FM PD Jeff Sanders is accepting T&Rs.

KBCO Denver afternoon jock Oz Medina moves to mornings, replacing the exiting Ira Gordon.

Mike McGowan takes over nights at WTIC-FM Hartford, Conn., replacing Dana Lundon, now at WZEE Madison, Wis. McGowan was last MD/jock at WKCI New Haven, Conn.

Buzz Jackson, last at WRMF West Palm Beach, Fla., is the new afternoon jock at WROO Jacksonville, Fla. He replaces Tom Murphy, who moved over to local sister station WSTF for mornings, where he bumped Pete Hansen, who exits.

Joe Logan, former KSSN Little Rock, Ark., PD, takes over middays at WZZK Birmingham, Ala.

WQBJ/WQBK-FM Albany, N.Y., has set the lineup for its new modern rock format. Former WZRQ Albany OM Cliff Nash joins as MD/midday host. PD Ron Bowen will handle afternoons. Nikki Neal from WRXS Ocean City, Md., will host nights. Dan Binder from crosstown WWCP joins as production director. Remaining in place are the syndicated Howard Stern morning show and overnight jock John Clark.

RADIO OWNERS OK DEREG BILL

While NAB's TV board squabbled throughout the week about a Senate broadcast deregulation proposal, NAB radio-station-group owners continued to express enthusiasm over the possibility of further industry consolidation and greater ad revenue that might come from repealed station ownership limits and greater leasing agreement leeway.

The NAB might be faced with lobbying both points of view to lawmakers on Capitol Hill.

The FCC already has announced plans to ease radio/TV cross-ownership rules and lower thresholds for waivers, but its reforms are not as extensive as those in the Senate proposal.

KMPC/KLIT FINED $20K

The FCC, following up on complaints from the NAACP, the National Black Media Coalition, and the National Hispanic Media Coalition, has fined Golden West's just-about-to-be-sold KMPC and KLIT (now KSCA) Los Angeles $20,000 for "deficient overall recruitment efforts" in attracting minorities, finding the stations failed to contact minority "specific sources" for almost half their vacancies.

In the Feb. 13 announcement, the commission also found that "minorities were absent from a significant number of the licensee's applicant pools."

The commission, however, found "no evidence of discrimination" in hiring practices and renewed the license of the stations.

The FCC action means that the Gene Autry-owned Golden West's sale of KMPC to Capital Cities/ABC will go through, but that the seller must first pay the fine.

FIELDS VOWS TO CLEAN FCC'S HOUSE

Rep. Jack Fields, R-Texas, the new House Telecommunication Subcommittee chairman, has vowed to call for a review of FCC policies and procedures and scrutinization of its budget requests.

Fields said in a recent speech to telco industry members: "It's house-cleaning time."

CLAUDY UPPED AT NAB

Lynn Claudy has been promoted from VP to senior VP of the NAB's science and technology department.

Claudly, who has been with the NAB since 1988, succeeds Michael Rau, who now works for EZ Communications as VP of new technology.

U.N. HEAD AT NAB LAS VEGAS

United Nations Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali will address a dinner for international broadcasters at the NAB annual convention in Las Vegas April 12.

Boutros-Ghali will speak at NAB's fourth annual International Broadcasting Leadership dinner at the Mirage Hotel.

FCC chairman Reed Hundt and four other commissioners also are planning to attend the convention. Hundt missed last year's convention because he was attending a world telecommunications conference in Argentina with Vice President Al Gore.

MIDSIZE MODERN RADIO PROVES ITS SAVVY

In recent months, scores of format singles have been embraced at medium- and small-market stations, while being given a wait-and-see attitude at major-market counterparts, helping to debunk the myth that the format is programmed from the top down. In time, some of the singles won over big-city programmers, others did not. And while the theories behind the trend are as numerous as the players involved, labels will no doubt continue to follow whatever playlist daylight they can find.

Program directors and promotion staffers warn against generalizing, but there does seem to be a musical rule of thumb emerging: Loud, fast sounds rule in the big cities, while poppier, older-skewing offerings stand a better shot in the outskirts.

Among singles recently getting early, substantial, small-town airplay were Aimee Mann's "That's Just What You Are," Ween's "Voodoo Lady," Throwing Muses' "Bright Yellow Gun," the Dave Matthews Band's "What Would You Say," Jeff Buckley's "Last Goodbye," the Mighty Mighty Bosstones' "Kinder Words," Dada's "All I Am," Sarah McLachlan's "Good Enough," and Sam Phillips' "Baby I Can't Please You." (One interesting case of geographic—as opposed to market size—acceptance was Dink's "Green Mind," which found a home almost exclusively at Midwestern outposts in Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, Milwaukee, and Kansas City, Mo.)

Other contributing factors: Smaller market stations, with fewer competitors on the dial, can spread out and try to attract older listeners through more varied—some would say softer—sounds (i.e., Mann), whereas major-market outlets zero in on the 18-24 demo and the harder, punk sounds that attract those listeners. Also, smaller stations spin more new records each week, thereby opening up the playlist possibilities.

CREATING A STORY

Winning converts at small markets and moving up to major ones is nothing new to radio promotion. For years, a favorite strategy of label staffers working R&B, top 40, album rock, adult contemporary, and country has been to land a fistful of smaller stations, sell records regionally through touring and airplay, and then present evidence of that success to major-market PDs, who are traditionally more conservative about the songs they include on their playlists.

Occasionally, that method of "creating a story" has been applied to modern rock. But since only a couple dozen modern rock outlets existed just five years ago, it was tough for promotion people to pick and choose among the handful of smaller stations.

And the fact is, unlike competing music formats, today's major-market modern rock PDs are among the most aggressive and daring in the business in terms of playing new music. "It's not like KROQ [Los Angeles] waits around to see what works" for other stations, says John Cohen, director of alternative promotion and marketing at Columbia Records. Indeed, the modern rock chart is littered with recent examples of obscure acts (Offspring, Veruca Salt) catapulted to stardom thanks to major stations taking chances; chances unheard of in other formats.

Like most in the business, Cohen says that when a single is released he would "love to get major-market airplay and break an act wide open. But I'm realistic. Not everything is

The Throwing Muses' single, "Bright Yellow Gun," traveled just such a path. For the week ending Jan. 22, the song had 30 Broadcast Data Systems-monitored stations on the record, good enough to place it inside the top 40 on the Modern Rock Tracks chart. Yet aside from the band's hometown outlet, WFNX, not one modern rock station in the top 25 markets had the single in heavy or medium rotation. But in the remaining smaller BDS-monitored markets, seven were spinning "Bright Yellow Gun" between 14-20 times a week, and four more were enthusiastic enough to play it 20-plus times a week. Two weeks later, the song had climbed to No. 22 with Los Angeles, Detroit, Seattle, Houston, Washington, D.C., and others were warming to the single.

'GOOD ENOUGH' CROSSOVER

McLachlan's "Good Enough" was another interformat crossover. For the week ending Sept. 18, 1994, the song was soaring with 30-plus spins a week in out-of-the-way places like Augusta, Ga., Austin, Texas, and Rochester, N.Y., while ignored in metros such as Chicago, Dallas, Minneapolis, and Phoenix. One month later, those big cities all were airing "Good Enough," which, with their help, climbed to No. 16 on the Modern Rock Tracks chart.

Not every small-town success wins converts across the board, though. Phillips' "Baby I Can't Please You," supported in Memphis, Albany, N.Y., and Columbus, Ohio, couldn't translate to major markets. But Dawn Hood, senior director of alternative promotion at Virgin, says the label was "thrilled" with the largely medium- and small-market modern rock response to Phillips.

She says, "We put her on the map as an artist modern rock will pay attention to for her next release," something the label had not been able to do prior to last year.

Records showing an increase in detections over the previous week, regardless of chart movement. A record which has been on either chart for more than 20 weeks will not receive a bullet, even if it registers an increase in detections. If two records are tied in number of plays, the record being played on more stations is placed first. Records below the top 20 are removed from the charts after 26 weeks.

'WE'RE IN HIPPIE LAND'

To be sure, playlists from both large- and small-market stations are remarkably similar, with hits in Chicago most likely becoming hits in Las Vegas, and vice versa. But, more and more discrepancies are popping up between the two. The difference may revolve around the simple fact that listeners in certain types of markets have different tastes.

"Geographically, we're in hippie land," says WEQX Albany, N.Y., PD Alexa Tobin, describing the station's upstate New York and Vermont surroundings. Therefore, she says it makes sense that the groovy sounds of the Dave Matthews Band work well for Tobin and not for her former employer, WFNX, located in much more cosmopolitan Boston. Tobin is not surprised that the band's sound was embraced early on in places like Des Moines, Iowa, Columbus, Ohio, and Augusta, Ga., where stations target laid-back audiences like Tobin's.

Sometimes listener preference is simply tied to a specific market. For instance, although it did not chart nationally, the manic horns of "Kinder Words" by the Mighty Mighty Bosstones scored a heavy rotation hit at KXK Salt Lake City. That, says station MD Sean Ziebrath, is because "Utah is a huge market for ska."

inventory control effort (Billboard, Feb. 11).

Retailers say Buena Vista has since "relaxed" the policy. Buena Vista was unavailable for comment.

Most distributors say it is highly unlikely Buena Vista will repeat its "Snow White" experience with "The Lion King."

"Kids can't get enough of this title," says one distributor who predicts the title could sell as many as 30 million units. "It's a must-have video, and 'Snow White' wasn't."

Distributors also say Paramount Home Video has set a realistic goal of 8 million-10 million units for "Forrest Gump," despite its barebones marketing campaign. The title arrives in stores April 28.

Paramount will spend $10 million in television ads, which is less than half the amount spent by other studios on titles with comparable box-office grosses.

Despite any problems during the fourth quarter, distributors and retailers point out that sales during that period were much better than the year before. Chains such as Tower Video, Suncoast Motion Picture Co., and Best Buy say they didn't have excess inventory problems.

"We'd love to have that kind of Christmas again," says Suncoast president Gary Ross.

Other industry observers say without the pressure of "Jurassic Park" and "Snow White," the market has settled down.

"The problem in the fourth quarter was that you had two huge titles out at the same time," says a rack-jobber executive. "If they stood alone, each would have done better, but the returns are acceptable."

Assistance in preparing this story was provided by Seth Goldstein in New York.

converts from among his three-dozen franchisees. Several are expected to join the Choices fold with the Palmer-owned stores, which should grow to 50 this year; others likely will sign on later.

Palmer himself wasn't able to make the acquisitions necessary to gain the critical mass required for a public offering. One alternative was to stand pat. However, says a video industry executive close to Valner, "Something has got to get Peter off center. He had to get out or get involved." Choices, according to this source, "is probably good for Peter and good for Maioriello."

Staying involved could be a problem, however. Choices and three unidentified chains, with combined annual revenues of $19 million, have decided not to merge. Ross would not say why, but observers point to questions about financing and shortcomings uncovered by due diligence as possibilities.

Indeed, while the music manufacturers are celebrating their 1994 results, music retailers are warning that the good times may not last. The concern is that unsold inventory, coupled with the reduction in profit margins from retail price wars, will worsen the health of music retailers and eventually hurt the entire industry.

Low Garrett, VP of purchasing for 404-store Camelot Music, says, "The euphoria some of our label and distribution partners are enjoying is perhaps providing a false sense of security."

Dave Mount, president of WEA, which leads all music distributors in market share, says he shares the "concerns" of retailers. "The difference between the SoundScan and RIAA numbers is the size of the pipeline. The pipeline expanded last year faster than consumer sales, which caused inventory to back up."

Gerald Weber, president of 560-store Blockbuster Music, agrees that "there's a lot of base inventory sitting there that hasn't gone through," but he puts an optimistic spin on the matter. "The inventory is out there being exposed to the customers."

The RIAA's survey, undertaken by the accounting firm KMPG Peat Marwick, includes data from the six major record companies and from large independents like Walt Disney Records. These sources represent 90% of all music sales, according to the RIAA. To capture the rest of the market, the trade organization relies upon a formula devised by SoundScan for estimating sales from stores that don't report to it.

Although industry pundits have predicted that direct selling of music will overtake retail sales, the RIAA's figures indicate that that scenario is far in the future. Net shipments of music by direct means—through record clubs, mail order, and TV sales—were valued at $1.5 billion last year, a 26% increase from $1.2 billion the year before. But direct selling's share of the overall music market edged up to only 12.5% in 1994 from 12% in 1993, which softens fears that retail's share is rapidly eroding.

RIAA chairman Jay Berman says, "Go back the last two or three years and there are some noticeable increases in [direct selling's] share. In 1994 the rate of increase stabilized." WEA's Mount says, "Our retail base is expanding faster than the direct route." He adds that electronic means of music delivery are "a ways down the road."

CD SHIPMENTS UP 33.6%

As for formats, the CD continued to widen its lead over cassettes. According to the RIAA figures, last year net shipments of CDs were 662.1 million, 33.6% higher than in 1993, while their dollar value rose 30% to $8.46 billion. Full-length CDs accounted for 59% of total unit shipments last year, compared to 51.8% the year before.

However, the average value of a CD fell to $12.78 in 1994 from $13.14, which was surprising since many labels raised suggested list prices during the year. Some sources attributed the lower average price to a glut of budget CDs in the marketplace.

Net shipments of album-length cassettes showed a slight increase of 1.7% to 345.4 million in 1994, while their value went up 2.1% to $2.97 billion. Albums on tape accounted for 30.7% of all shipments in 1994, down from 35.5% the previous year.

The change in the CD/cassette ratio varies with the record company. Jim Caparro, president of PolyGram Group Distribution, which handles such labels as Mercury, Island, Motown, and A&M, says cassettes amounted to about 20% of sales in dollars last year, a decline from 23% the year before. In units, the format mix at PolyGram is 50% CDs to 26% cassettes.

John Burns, president of Uni Distribution, which sells product from MCA, Geffen, and Liberty, says, "Our CD/cassette ratio has always been different from the RIAA mix because of the mix of product we have. We're strong in country and black titles."

Traditionally, country and urban are strong cassette markets.

Vinyl staged a comeback in 1994, but many observers believe it is not indicative of a long-term trend. They say a few big sellers like Pearl Jam's "Vitalogy," the LP version of which was released before CD and cassette, spiked the overall numbers. Unit shipments of vinyl LPs rose 58.3% to 1.9 million from 1.2 million the year before; the dollar value increased 67.9% to $17.8 million from $10.6 million.

One prominent casualty in 1994 was the singles market. Combined net shipments for CD, cassette, and vinyl singles dropped 5.9% to 102.1 million units last year, as dollar value fell 4.3% to $378.2 million. Only seven singles sold more than 1 million units, whereas there were 15 million-sellers in 1993. However, the CD single showed a 19% gain over 1993 to 9.3 million units.

Music video was flat last year. Units rose 1.8% to 11.2 million from 11 million; dollar value went up 8.3% to $231.1 million from $213.3 million. But the configuration seems to have settled onto a comfortable level after disappointing years in 1991 and 1992. Much was expected of music video after 1990, when shipments jumped 50% to 9.2 million units, thanks largely to three multiplatinum videos by New Kids On The Block. The next two years, shipments fell back to 6.1 million and 7.6 million units, respectively.

MiniDisc and digital compact cassette are included in the figures for CDs and cassettes, respectively, but their totals were not considered significant and were not broken out.

'94 U.K. Album Sales Peak; Almost 177 Mil Shipped

BY JEFF CLARK-MEADS

LONDON—More albums are being bought in the U.K. than ever before—and the singles market is healthier than at any time since 1987.

Figures released Feb. 16 by the British Phonographic Industry show a record total of 176.9 million albums were shipped to stores in 1994, an increase of 15.2% over the previous year. The value of the market rose 17% to $1.28 billion.

The number of singles delivered to stores rose 12% to 63 million—30 million of which were CDs—with value up 15% to $153 million. The total of singles units shipped is the highest in seven years.

BPI chairman Rupert Perry suggests the record year is due to three factors: "We're now coming out of recession, there's a greater consumer confidence than there has been previously, and there were more new artists broken last year than in the previous three years," he says. "I monitor how many new artists come through, and last year there were not only more of them but they broke bigger."

Perry also regards the retail achievement of 1994 as particularly impressive because for the first three months of the year the record industry was still under investigation by the government's Monopolies & Mergers Commission.

The BPI notes that the figures were assisted by the greater penetration of CD players in the U.K., which rose during 1994 from 43% of households to 56%. A total of 116 million CDs were shipped in 1994, up 25%, while total cassettes were flat at 56 million units.

The organization says that approximately "3 million homes acquired a [CD] player for the first time, and this will have accounted for much of the growth in CD album sales."

The exchange rate used in this story is $1.56 to the pound sterling.

HOT 100 SINGLES SPOTLIGHT™

by Dave Elliott

MADONNA'S "Take A Bow" (Maverick/Sire/Warner Bros.) builds on last week's explosive gain and becomes her 11th No. 1 Hot 100 song. Although only No. 4 in sales, "Bow" is No. 1 in airplay by a wide margin and wins overall. It was a close victory, however, over TLC's "Creep" (La Face/Arista), which was down in overall points this week. "Bow" will most likely rack up at least a couple more weeks at No. 1. Next in line for the top spot is Brandy's "Baby" (Atlantic). It continues at No. 1 in sales, but to challenge for No. 1 overall it needs several weeks of significant airplay gains like this week's biggest gain on the entire chart. It's top 10 in monitored airplay at WHJX Jacksonville, Fla., WHHH Indianapolis, and KZHT Salt Lake City. Right behind Brandy is Soul For Real's "Candy Rain" (Uptown/MCA). Its sales continue to surge, taking the third-biggest sales gain on the chart and making major airplay jumps at WWKX Providence, R.I., KGGI San Bernardino/Riverside, Calif., and KBXX Houston. As expected, Brownstone's "If You Love Me" (MJJ/Epic) moves into the top 10, jumping from No. 11 to 8. "Love" makes the second-biggest sales gain on the chart and the second-biggest overall gain. It is No. 1 at KDON Monterey/Salinas, Calif., WJMN Boston, and KCAQ Santa Barbara, Calif.

BELOW THE TOP 10, Sheryl Crow's "Strong Enough" (A&M) follows Brownstone as the third-biggest overall gainer on the chart, fueled in part by the third-biggest airplay increase on the chart. The song is now No. 1 at WHYT Detroit and No. 3 at WHTZ New York. Next week's chart looks likely to have the tightest top 10 in weeks, but "Strong" has a strong chance of becoming Crow's second top 10 single. The biggest point gainer on the entire chart is K-Ci Hailey (of Jodeci) with "If You Think You're Lonely Now" (Mercury). The song explodes in sales this week, its first full week in stores, debuting at No. 8 on the Hot 100 Singles Sales Chart and shooting up 34 places overall to No. 18. "Lonely" is top 10 in airplay at KPWR Los Angeles, KZFM Corpus Christi, Texas, and KMEL San Francisco. Subway's "This Lil' Game We Play" (Biv 10/Motown) makes the fourth-biggest overall point gain on the chart, based on the fifth-biggest airplay and fifth-biggest sales gain on the chart. The song has been on the chart four weeks and has posted a top five overall increase each week since its debut. "Game" jumps 11 points on the chart to No. 25 and is top 10 at KBXX Houston, WPGC Washington, D.C., and WERQ, Baltimore. Rounding out the top five biggest gainers this week is Dionne Farris' "I Know" (Columbia), which jumps eight notches and enters the top 20 this week at No. 19. "Know" is reporting early top 10 ranking at KRBE Houston, WFLZ Tampa, Fla., and KKLQ San Diego.

FRANCE'S VICTOIRES HONOR NEW FACES

nation, with new faces and such fresh musical styles as rap, Algerian rai, and funk taking the lion's share of trophies. Among the newer acts capturing awards were rappers MC Solaar (best male act and best video) and IAM (band of the year); female singers Enzo Enzo (best song and best female act) and Rachel des Bois (female newcomer); funk band Sinclair (upcoming band); pop singer De Palmas (upcoming male act); Voce de Corsica (traditional album); Eric Serra (soundtrack); and rai superstar Khaled (best Francophone act).

The rap victories were particularly notable as the genre only moved into the mainstream in 1994. Receiving their awards, both MC Solaar and IAM said their Victoires were dedicated to all the young rap acts in France.

One of the evening's highlights was the celebration of Khaled, the Algerian rai star who lives in France and cannot perform in his native country. Receiving his Victoire for best Francophone act, Khaled dedicated it to "all the youngsters who try to do cultural activities and play music in Algeria."

Few veteran acts received Victoires. Francis Cabrel, who was nominated twice and whose Columbia album "Samedi Soir Sur La Terre" was 1994's best seller here, took just one award (best album), while other superstars—including Alain Bashung (four nominations), Veronique Sanson, and Jean-Jacques Goldman—went home with nothing.

As for record companies, PolyGram won six Victoires, Sony Music three, Virgin/Delabel two, BMG two, and EMI (via Chrysalis) one. Independent labels Olivi, Dreyfus Jazz, and Quelques Notes/Saphir took one each.

Organized by TV production company Telescope Audiovisuel, the 10th edition of the Victoires was broadcast live on public channel France 2 and throughout the world on TV5.

Special awards were presented to Eddy Mitchell for the biggest concert attendance in 1994 (400,863 tickets sold) and to Patricia Kaas for best export album. Kaas' "Je Te Dis Vous" on Columbia/Sony Music sold 1 million copies outside France. Tributes were paid to singer Claude Nougaro; author and lyricist Pierre Delanoë; singer/composer Didier Barbelivien; film-score composer Maurice Jarre, who received a Victoire from his son Jean-Michel Jarre.

The media came under attack at various times during the evening. IAM front man Akhenaton urged TV channels "to change so that French music doesn't end up like a private club or a clubhouse," referring to the current lack of music programming on TV. Radio stations also were targets. TV personality Nagui, who co-hosted the evening, invited "FM stations to take as many risky stands as full-service stations do."

A week prior to the pop/variety Victoires, the second annual classical music awards were presented. Korean conductor Myung-Whun Chung, who was ousted a few months ago as musical director of the Paris Opera of la Bastille, redeemed himself with three awards: best conductor, best lyrical production (Shostakovich's "Lady Macbeth" released on DG), and best recording of a French work (Olivier Messiaen's "Eclair Sur L'au-dela"). Other winners included violin player Patrick Fontanarosa (best solo player), pianist Marie-Joséphine Jude (best new talent), and William Christie (best baroque recording for Rameau's "Grands Motets" on Erato). Also, conductor John Eliot Gardiner was honored for best contribution to French music by a foreign artist or orchestra.

NEW ACTS GRAB THE SPOTLIGHT AT GERMANY'S ECHOS

Nine, each, won prizes at the ceremony in the Bavaria Film And TV Studios here, which will be transmitted on national television Feb 21.

All these acts sprung from relative obscurity to national, and sometimes international, success during 1994, the period for which the awards were given.

At the same time, stalwarts such as Marius Müller-Westernhagen gave the youngsters a run for their money. Two years ago Westernhagen earned three awards for his 1992 "JaJa" album, and this year he captured the Echo for best national male artist, while his record company, WEA Germany, won the best-marketing of the year prize for his 1.5 million-unit-selling album "Affentheater" (Monkey Theater).

Most of the Echo awards were based on sales data from chart compilers Media Control reported during the Jan. 31, 1994-Jan. 31, 1995, period, making the awards more of an indication of national tastes than of industry opinions.

Marusha, the Berlin techno DJ turned recording artist, beat competition from established artists such as Nena and Pe Werner and took home the best national female artist award. Her album "Raveland" on Low Spirit/Motor Music is one of the growing number of techno albums crossing over into mainstream sales success, and her award was a vindication of the growing power of Germany's dance productions.

Klaus Jankuhn, producer of Marusha's album, as well as other Berlin bleep makers like Westbam, reinforced the techno takeover by winning the producer of the year award.

Another Berlin act, Luciletric, fronted by the charismatic Lucille van Org, won the best single award for "Mädchen," a catchy song about chatting up guys. Luciletric performed its latest single "Warum?" (Why) at the awards.

Six Was Nine, a Virgin signing, won the newcomer prize and performed its international hit single "Drop Dead Beautiful."

For Intercord act Pur, the long, hard slog through venues in Germany's smaller towns paid off, and this year the band won national band of the year.

The runaway worldwide success of Enigma's album "The Cross of Changes" won the act and its producer Michael Cretu the award for most successful German production abroad.

On the international front, the ceremony had significant prestige by getting

The classical celebration won critical praises for the quality of the performances and the diversity of the winners. Kevin Keinmann, director of PolyGram Classics in France, who had reservations after attending the first awards ceremony, said it was "a good event that has improved over last year." He says that this prime-time celebration of classical music on television was "positive for classical music in general," but would like to see "a little less decorum and more simplicity."

The award winners are picked by a jury of 2,500 industry professionals. Here is a complete list of pop/variety Victoire winners:

Male act: MC Solaar (Polydor).

in his successful solo work.

"We evaluate our catalog on a periodic basis to identify anything that is legitimately of value to the consumer and can be presented in a new or impressive or significant way, and this was certainly one of the projects that deserved to exist," says Island VP of marketing Matt Stringer.

CLAPTON CONNECTION

The 63-track anthology was compiled by PolyGram Group Distribution VP of catalog development Peter Levenson, who also produced the Grammy-winning Eric Clapton "Crossroads" boxed set. In fact, Levenson says "Crossroads" laid the groundwork for "The Finer Things."

"In many ways, 'Crossroads' was the first draft for the Winwood [project]," he says. "If you look at the two artists side by side, the pacing is so similar, it's frightening sometimes. One has Yardbirds, one has Spencer Davis. One has [John] Mayall and Cream, one has Traffic—and then they're together in Blind Faith. So as I was working on [The Finer Things], I felt, 'We've sort of done this before, haven't we?' And that helped a bit."

The connections between Winwood and Clapton—and their respective boxed sets—are so deep the rendition of the blues standard "Crossroads" that appears on "The Finer Things" was originally prepared for the Clapton collection, but shelved until now, says Levenson. It was recorded in 1966 by Eric Clapton & the Powerhouse, featuring Winwood on vocals, and is arranged much like the version Clapton later made famous with Cream.

Generously illustrated with photos of every stage of Winwood's career, "The Finer Things" is annotated by John McDermott, author of a recent book on Jimi Hendrix. Levenson says McDermott was fortunate to interview late Winwood producer Jimmy Miller and Miller protégé Eddie Kramer—both of whom furnished the writer with vital session information for the liner notes.

While the Winwood set does not feature as many previously unreleased selections as other compilations of this nature, it does offer some rarities, including an electric version of the Blind Faith classic "Can't Find My Way Home," which will be serviced to album rock, adult alternative, and AC radio as the focus track of a 15-cut sampler, says Stringer. That promotional CD is scheduled to be serviced March 6, 15 days before the release of the box. Stringer says Island is preparing giveaway promotions at key stations in those formats.

A BROAD SCALE PROJECT

The marketing plan for "The Finer Things" is straightforward, geared toward obtaining optimum price and positioning at retail, in-store play, and listening-booth placement. The latter "isn't something you always do with boxed sets, but it certainly drives home the point that we're making about how broad scale [this project] is," says Stringer.

Randy Morris, director of purchasing for Miami-based Spec's Music, says the Winwood box "will do really well. They've sent out a sample on the product, and it's a really good collection."

The media campaign for "The Finer Things" has yet to be finalized, says Stringer, but he confirms that a special promotion with VH1 is in the works, as well as TV buys on cable networks CNN and E!

On the print side, says Stringer, Island has received commitments for features and reviews in major publications and plans ad buys aimed at a broad, 18-49-year-old demographic.

Despite a strong interest in Winwood's music, Island's efforts are hampered by the artist's lack of participation in the promotion of the project or by a current album or tour to ignite sales.

Winwood, who just completed a world tour with Traffic in support of the reunited group's "Far From Home" album, is taking a short break before starting work on his next solo project, says his manager, Ron Weisner. The artist has been signed to Virgin Records worldwide since 1988, when he left Island, says Weisner.

Even without Winwood to promote "The Finer Things," Island will ship at least 50,000 units in the U.S. and another 50,000 in the rest of the world, according to Stringer. List-priced in America at $49.95 for the CD version, the box will be released simultaneously in most major international markets, including Canada; all of Western Europe, with an emphasis on the U.K., France, Italy, Germany, and the Netherlands; most of Asia, including Hong Kong; and the larger markets in Latin America and Africa.

Because "The Finer Things" was completed before "Far From Home" was released, no material from that Traffic album appears here. The compilation's most recent recording is "One And Only Man," from Winwood's 1990 Virgin record, "Refugees Of The Heart."

Asked why Island waited so long to release "The Finer Things," Stringer says, "We could have released it in the fall [of 1994], but our attitude was that we could get more attention during the first quarter or the beginning of the second quarter than we could in a glut of boxed-set and superstar releases in the fourth quarter."

He adds that "The Finer Things" will have "a shelf life and some history over the course of the year, and we can still take advantage of the holiday season with retail programs."

PRIORITY'S 'FRIDAY' FILM SETS OFFER RAP, OLD-SCHOOL R&B

created sets from the movie.

"Old School Friday: More Music From The Motion Picture" will feature previously recorded tracks that still are being selected. Turner says the album is being released far enough from the original soundtrack that there won't be any confusion between the two.

The marketing strategy for the second album will piggyback on the original "Friday" soundtrack and the film. In addition to its own advertising campaign, the album also will be promoted at low-rider car shows in April.

No singles are planned for the inspired-by album.

Priority also is planning to release two companion old-school compilation albums to sell to retailers as a "package deal."

Turner says, "We'll rack the inspired-by album in the compilation and soundtrack areas of retail. We look at the release of the companion albums as a marketing opportunity for the major chains."

Violet Brown, urban music buyer for Torrance, Calif.-based 350-store Wherehouse Entertainment, sees a combination of factors affecting "Friday" sales: "We expect the 'Friday' soundtrack album to do well based on the artists featured on the album, the theme of the film, and its

Multifaceted Priority artist Ice Cube, left, appears on the label's soundtrack for the film "Friday;" he also co-wrote the script with rapper DJ Pooh, and stars in the film. Dr. Dre, right, contributed to the soundtrack with "Keep Their Head Ringin'," the album's first single.

CONTINUING THEMES: Advances by developing artists and soundtracks continue to impact the charts in 1995's early going. With the theatrical release of "Boys On The Side," sales on that film's stellar all-women soundtrack explode from good to great (37-18), notching The Billboard 200's Greatest Gainer. The title debuted last week with almost 24,000 units; this week, the single-week tally almost doubles, to roughly 47,000. Representing new talent is Hootie & the Blowfish, who parlay a "Late Night With David Letterman" appearance into a top 10 slot (11-7). The band registers a 29% gain in unit sales, the third largest percentage increase among the 200 titles on last week's chart.

LIGHTS, CAMERA, ACTION: Aside from "Boys On The Side," another soundtrack bulleting on The Billboard 200 this week is "Immortal Beloved" (68-64) which also reigns over Top Classical Albums for a fourth week. The top 50 positions also are lined with soundtracks that paced sales earlier this year, "Ready To Wear" (No. 45) and "Higher Learning" (No. 49), and two that made much hay in 1994, "The Lion King" (No. 23) and "Pulp Fiction" (No. 33). The chart also sports a bullet for the "Lion King Sing-Along" EP (197-172). You also must figure the re-entry of Adam Sandler's comedy album (No. 143) benefits from his box-office-topping "Billy Madison." Will the Oscar nominations affect album sales? Yes, indirectly, inasmuch as studios are either rereleasing or expanding screens for four of the five films nominated for Best Picture.

IN WITH THE NEW: Hootie & the Blowfish and sophomore band Live (17-12), a recent "Saturday Night Live" beneficiary, are prime examples of how the first quarter's climate can aid the growth of developing acts. Both rise to new chart peaks, with No. 7 Hootie ringing up almost 82,000 units for the week, and Live pulling close to 62,000 units. Now keep your eye on Des'Ree (50-41), whose Feb. 11 stop on "SNL" should impact next week's chart. In the meantime, Oasis flags the Pacesetter award with a 42% sales gain (151-120), while Bush (85-69), Dave Matthews Band (98-79), Nashville sophomore Tracy Byrd (124-103), Rancid (149-132), Sponge (157-135), and 4 P.M. (156-136) each post gains exceeding 20% over prior-week sales. Other developing talents who bullet: Weezer (No. 22), Brandy (No. 25), the Notorious B.I.G. (No. 34), Portishead (No. 82), Wade Hayes (No. 114), and Keith Murray (No. 171), an eclectic assortment, indeed.

TIMES THEY ARE A-CHANGIN': On last week's charts, we changed the erstwhile Chaos label to the new Work Group logo, reflecting the change in Sony Music's structure (Billboard, Feb. 18). In the next couple of weeks, the continuing evolution of WEA's imprints will see our video charts change the A*Vision moniker to WarnerVision, a consequence of that division's shift from Atlantic to Warner Bros. (Billboard, Jan. 21).

CUPID'S BOW: The combination of shopping for Valentine's Day gifts and the fact that many businesses had a three-day weekend led to an almost inevitable increase in sales over the prior week, up 5.5% (as shown below in Market Watch), but business is practically flat with the comparable 1994 week. Although the Feb. 13 holiday for Lincoln's birthday did not fall in the tracking period, three-day weekends often increase Saturday and Sunday shopping. The album that most conspicuously benefits from the spirit of Valentine's Day is "A Time For Romance," a budget-priced easy listener from Madacy, which bows at No. 145 on The Billboard 200, while Yanni continues to benefit from his Valentine's campaign at Target Stores (41-38 and 142-123). On Top Off-Price Classical, Pro Arte's "Romance & Roses" rides Cupid's coattails to a debut at No. 4; Valentine's Day also may benefit Teldec's gay-targeted "Sensuous Classics, Too," which bows at No. 6 on Top Classical Albums.

HIGH FIVE: Garth Brooks sees a tiny drop of less than 2%, fetching his seventh week at No. 1 on The Billboard 200 (150,000 units), while the residual effect of the American Music Awards help boost Boyz II Men 3-2 (130,000 units). Each of the top five albums have one-week sums exceeding 100,000 units.

50-VOLUME BLUES VAULT SERIES LAUNCHED

turned-gospel shouter Rev. Robert Wilkins; "1963 Isn't 1962," a '63 session from Aberdeen, Miss., legend Booker "Bukka" White; and "Cryin' Won't Help You," a 1972 date by the rarely-recorded Delta guitar ace Houston Stackhouse.

Future Blues Vault volumes are planned from such blues colossi as Big Joe Williams, Rev. Gary Davis, Little Brother Montgomery, Henry Townsend, Honeyboy Edwards, Sleepy John Estes, Furry Lewis, Scrapper Blackwell, Fred McDowell, and Johnny Shines, among many others. Several artists will be the subject of more than one album.

Rosenthal got his start as a discophile and recording engineer during the first blues revival of the early 1960s.

"It was pretty organic, actually," says Rosenthal, who in that era associated with such figures on the nascent blues scene as Dick Spottswood (founder of Washington, D.C.'s Piedmont Records), Tom Hoskins (rediscoverer of John Hurt), John Fahey (folk-blues guitarist and rediscoverer of Bukka White and Skip James) and Ed Denson (Fahey's fellow blues researcher and co-owner of Takoma Records).

In that era, before classic blues 78s were widely reissued on LP, Rosenthal says, "The only way to make copies of early 78s, because you couldn't afford to buy them, was to have a tape recorder. That's as simple as it gets. Most of us couldn't afford brand-new equipment, but very good second-hand semi-professional or professional gear.

"Shortly after that, as my friends actually started going out and doing the first round of rediscoveries, the only thing we had to add was microphones. I had an early interest in audio, anyway, so it was just a natural progression."

Rosenthal, who operated a recording studio in his parents' basement at the time, wound up recording Hurt for Piedmont and James for Takoma in 1964. Several years later, after establishing Adelphi in 1968, he began doing his own recording in earnest: In 1970, for instance, he embarked on a four-month field recording trip, which began in Chicago with Big Joe Williams acting as the primary talent scout.

Around 1970, Adelphi began releasing a handful of Rosenthal's own recordings and some of the tapes cut for Piedmont and Takoma that had languished in the vault. Rosenthal says of the latter material, "What happened was, as we started building our own label, a lot of this earlier material that we still had in our vaults, because we were protecting masters for other people, became available for sale . . . We bought back our own tapes, basically."

Adelphi's first release of the material proved to be the right idea at the

'A lot of this earlier material . . . became available for sale . . . We bought back our own tapes' wrong time. Rosenthal says, "It was the very end—we didn't know it was the end at that point—of the blues revival. It was dropping rapidly. John Hurt was dead, Skippy [James], all the performing revival players were dead or dying . . . We got seven or eight LPs into the release when the bottom fell out of the blues market."

Rosenthal survived the blues depression during the '70s and '80s by diversifying into other styles of music—rock, rock-blues, country, bluegrass, jazz, and, much later, reggae (with the Sunsplash series of live releases)—and by operating a distributorship.

However, after the Robert Johnson reissue scored sales in 1990, Rosenthal says, "It became pretty obvious to us that there was a bona-fide blues revival going on . . . We came to a conclusion about two-and-a-half years ago that it was really time [to release the Blues Vault material], to get in more quickly this time, and not lose it."

So far, the Blues Vault albums have reflected exceptional care in their annotation and packaging: They feature notes by such blues authorities as songwriter Omar. They join established artists Candy Dulfer, Warren Hill, and Marion Meadows, the latter two having just been repositioned off the Novus imprint onto RCA. Omar's label debut is slated for the spring, Bugnon's in the fall.

Novus is now the imprint for straight-ahead jazz, home for Danilo Perez, Mulgrew Miller, Vanessa Rubin, Antonio Hart, and John Pizzarelli. According to Ramey, the label is planning to release a live set from the late Carmen McRae, "For Lady Day," which honors Billie Holiday. Also scheduled is a summit meeting of jazz's youngest, as-yet-unheralded trumpeters.

The new Groovetown imprint will showcase rhythm-based musics, says Bacchus. "I don't want to call it acid jazz or hip-hop, because labeling them is sometimes counterproductive," he says. "But it will be music for club play or black, urban, or rhythm crossover radio."

Key to the launch of Groovetown will be two new signings, the Brooklyn Funk Essentials and vibraphonist

Roy Ayers (Billboard, Feb. 4). They, along with fellow hybridists Steve Coleman and Maceo Parker, both of whom will move from Novus to Groovetown, are seen as key figures in the development of a burgeoning new sound.

"Roy's work from his Polydor days is the sound everyone is currently into," says Bacchus. "It's a second career for him, which will be a new start for us. With this music, we'll be targeting a younger audience, not necessarily the consumers who look only in the jazz bins. I can see Roy showing up in both the pop and R&B categories, as well as jazz. We're open to bringing in this new music and having it flourish under the jazz umbrella." Both Ayers and Brooklyn Funk Essentials will have their Groovetown debuts in the spring.

Bacchus and Ramey anticipate some cross-fertilization of the labels. Says Ramey, "We're attempting to encourage mainstream listeners and nonmainstreamers alike to discover the breadth of this music."

Spottswood, Robert Palmer, David Evans, and Steve LaVere, and photography, some of it hand-tinted, by Jim Marshall and David Gahr.

Rosenthal says, "We spent an incredible amount of time working with the tapes. One of the major problems working with these tapes from the '60s is their willingness to self-destruct for no apparent reason . . . The tapes are so fragile that [with] many of the machines, if you try to put these tapes on, when they do a hard right-angle turn, you watch the backing go one way and you watch the oxide go the other way."

While the initial Blues Vault releases came slowly because of production concerns, Rosenthal says he hopes to release three albums per quarter for the remainder of 1995, with another three or four per quarter for the duration. He plans to bring out a second Skip James set (focusing on James' unique piano style) and albums by bluesman-turned-evangelist Rev. Gary Davis, guitarist Hacksaw Harney, and medicine-show performer Harmonica Frank Floyd this spring.

The Blues Vault Series has been licensed for release overseas by Demon Records through its Edsel Records imprint.

Incredibly, Rosenthal also is sitting on a mountain of film footage shot during his 1970 field trip.

"What goes along with [the recordings] is about 100,000 feet of color sound-sync film," he says. "It's something in excess of 40 hours. With the exception of about 15 minutes that we licensed to Mississippi educational TV about seven or eight years for their production of 'Good Morning Blues,' no one's seen any of this before."

He says Adelphi may create its own video line or license the footage out for home-video release; he also would like to edit the best material into a one-hour broadcast show with a possible companion interactive CD.

To date, Adelphi has focused press activities for the Blues Vault Series on publications like Living Blues and other specialist organs, but Rosenthal says the label will now move toward "more conventional magazines."

The company intends to support future releases with point-of-sale materials like posters and standees, and with advertising in the major trades.

Radio, Rosenthal says with an ironic laugh, has been a sticking point: "We've been doing saturation bombing with radio, but it's very difficult. The main problem is, although there's a lot of radio blues programs, most of those programs are really electric blues . . . We got back from several of the stations, 'We love the stuff, but truthfully I don't see how we can work it into our blues format.' Of course we're saying, 'Wait a minute! You have a three-hour blues show, and you can't figure out how to work some of this material in?'"

While the efforts to keep a flow of Blues Vault product taxes what Rosenthal calls his staff of "two-and-a-half" (himself, VP Hap Passman, and a part-timer), Adelphi is still making an effort to distribute royalties to the survivors of the label's long-deceased stars.

"All of these artists that we recorded were given advances at the time, both film advances, recording advances, et cetera," Rosenthal says. "Since most of the artists we recorded were either out of Chicago or out of the Memphis area, I'm in touch with people in those locales that help track the heirs. In some cases, it's been very difficult."

B'USTER SETS AWARDS SHOW

Blockbuster Entertainment will host its first award show, called the Blockbuster Entertainment Awards, scheduled to air June 6 on CBS. The two-hour broadcast will include nominees chosen from the top-grossing films, most-rented videos, and best-selling albums of 1994. Winners will be chosen through electronic balloting in Blockbuster's 3,400 video and music stores. Consumers may cast their votes from March 1-31.

RIGHT GROUPS OK VIRGINIA BILL

ASCAP, BMI, and SESAC gave their approval Feb. 15 of a pending restaurant music license bill in Virginia they hope will serve as an example of a mediated bill that could replace more restrictive language in 10 other state bills. Virginia Senate Bill 858 calls for electronic repertoire list requests, on-site ID, and "no deceptive acts or practices." Gone are penalty and phone-ahead provisions, hard-copy lists, and neighboring-fee demands. The bill goes before the Virginia House this week.

BANNER 1994 FOR ASCAP

ASCAP registered record receipts of $422.7 million last year, an increase of approximately 10% over the previous year. The performance-right society, at its annual membership meeting in Los Angeles Feb. 13, also reported a 14% increase to $231.8 million in distributions to writer and publisher members. Of the receipts total, $319.1 million came from domestic sources, and $103.6 million was from foreign receipts. ASCAP also lowered by about 1%, to 18.099%, the percentage absorbed by the cost of operating the society in 1994, based on domestic and foreign receipts.

PEARL JAM, MARIAH LIFT SONY

Sony Music Entertainment's revenues for the third quarter, which ended Dec. 31, rose 4.1% to $1.58 billion on the strength of worldwide hits like Pearl Jam's "Vitalogy," which has sold more than 7 million units, and Mariah Carey's "Merry Christmas," which sold over 6 million units. However, U.S. sales were up only 2%. The Tokyo-based company says operating profit for the music group "was down due to such factors as the higher yen value."

TWO SALES EXECS EXIT EMI

Senior execs at EMI Records are likely to have added duties at the National Assn. of Recording Merchandisers Convention in San Diego Feb. 22-25—looking for new sales execs. On the eve of NARM, the label let go its two senior sales execs, Bob Cahill, senior VP of field marketing, and Dutch Cramblitt, VP of sales.

SELL-THRU MEETS 'WEDDING' NOM

PolyGram Video got an Oscar-sized valentine Feb. 14 with an Oscar nomination for "Four Weddings And A Funeral" for best picture. It's the first time a title available at sell-through has been so honored: "Weddings" was reprinted to $19.95 two weeks earlier in a PolyGram Valentine's Day promotion. Sources say a potential Oscar could add 100,000 units to the estimated 300,000 already shipped. Blockbuster, meanwhile, is taking advantage of family ties to bump sales of Oscar favorite "Forrest Gump." The chain is giving the book "Gumpisms, The Wit And Wisdom Of Forrest Gump" to customers preordering the movie, which arrives April 27 at $22.95. Viacom owns Blockbuster and "Gumpisms" publisher Pocket Books.

ROUNDER OPENS EURO DISTRIBUTOR

Rounder Records, which is celebrating its 25th birthday, has set up a new distribution company, Continental Record Services, in the Netherlands to serve the European Union market. The company also will license product for European manufacture, market and promote, and act as subpublisher.

24-HR MTV IN SOUTH AFRICA

MTV, South African recording star Johnny Clegg, and South African media group Primequity (Radio 702) have joined to launch the 24-hour MTV South Africa in 1996. Equity in the network will be divided between the three partners with 5% allotted to the Music And Youth Development Trust, which will serve as a national outreach school of contemporary music aimed at unemployed youth in South Africa. Video programming will comprise South African music with some international programming and several signature MTV shows.

Madonna 'Takes A Bow' At No. 1

MADONNA IS THE BIG NEWS for the second week in a row as "Take A Bow" moves to No. 1 as predicted. It's the 11th chart-topper for Ms. Ciccone, which means that more than one-third of her 32 chart singles have reached the top. "Bow" is Madonna's second No. 1 single since the Hot 100 was converted to SoundScan sales data and Broadcast Data Systems airplay information. The first was "This Used To Be My Playground" in the summer of 1992.

Madonna is now in fourth place on the list of artists with the most No. 1 singles. Just one notch ahead of her and tied for third place are the Supremes and Michael Jackson with 12 apiece. Can Madonna match their status? Easily. In second place is Elvis Presley with 17. Will Madonna someday match Elvis? Entirely possible. In solid first place is the Beatles with 20. Could Madonna break that record? Very difficult, but not impossible, even if the Beatles were to collect another No. 1 with "title to come," the John Lennon track that the other three Beatles are completing. Of course, that means Madonna would almost have to double her total. It's taken her 11 years to collect her first 11.

William Simpson of Los Angeles, the first Chart Beat reader to have a letter arrive at this column's new London address, says that "Take A Bow" is the ninth Madonna single with three words in the title to top the chart. Simpson adds that all 14 of Madonna's three-word title songs have made the top 10.

AND "THE HITS" JUST KEEPS ON COMING: Garth Brooks shall not be moved—at least, not from the top of The Billboard 200, where he has been No. 1 for seven weeks. That puts "The Hits" in a tie with "The Chase" as Garth's second-longest running No. 1 album. "Ropin' The Wind" was on top for 18 weeks, and "In Pieces" had a five-week run.

THINK TWICE: Those words might be good advice to 550 Music regarding which Celine Dion single to release next. "Think Twice" slipped away when released as the third single from "The Colour Of My Love" after "The Power Of Love" and "Misled." It spent only four weeks on the Hot 100, peaking at No. 95. It's a different story in the U.K., where "Think Twice" is No. 1 and is approaching million-selling status. Ironically, "Think Twice" is Sony's biggest-selling single since the original "The Power Of Love" by Jennifer Rush in 1985.

ONE IF BY LAND: "You Gotta Be" by Des'ree slips one notch to No. 7 on the Hot 100, but she is still the sole British representative in the top 10. In fact, she is the first new U.K. artist to make the top 10 since Scotland's the Proclaimers went to No. 3 with "I'm Gonna Be (500 Miles)" in August 1993 (and that song was four years old at the time). Des'ree is the highest-ranked of six U.K. artists on the Hot 100. The others are Martin Page, Portishead, Simple Minds, John Waite, and Sting.

READER'S RIGHT: Rob Durkee of Premiere Radio Networks, the first Chart Beat reader to phone in an item to the London switchboard, believes that 2 Unlimited has set a new record, with "Get Ready For This" moving up to No. 44 in its 24th chart week. That's the longest a single has been on the Hot 100 without making the top 40. Durkee also told Chart Beat to "Check Yo Self" when it comes to which song made the biggest leap to No. 1 on Hot R&B Singles. Although the Supremes did hold the record for many years with the 22-1 move of "You Can't Hurry Love," the champ is Ice Cube, who moved 44-1 in 1993 with "Check Yo Self."

GUIDED BY VOICES DEBUTS ON MATADOR

"I listened to it and I just thought it was the greatest thing," Griffin says. He was so impressed that he not only agreed to distribute some of the band's earlier recordings, but he offered to sign the band to Scat.

The first GBV Scat release was the 1993 single, "The Grand Hour," which was followed by the "Vampire On Titus" album (Billboard, March 19, 1994). Scat had a brief distribution deal with Caroline before parting with Matador for manufacturing and distribution.

When GBV played the New Music Seminar in the summer of 1993, Pollard was surprised by the reaction. "We received a pretty good response to the live show, although we hadn't played live for six years," he says. After the show, the band was interviewed by Everett True from the U.K. music publication Melody Maker. "I thought maybe something was going on," Pollard says. "Then it just began to snowball, and it hasn't stopped yet."

Following the release of 1994's "Bee Thousand," several labels began courting the band, including Warner Bros., Capitol, and indie Restless and Matador. The band still owed Scat one record, but Griffin had no hard feelings about the band leaving the fold prematurely.

"The band made it clear to me that they were ready to move on, and I didn't want to hold them back," Griffin says. "It was beyond my abilities and resources to do the right kind of job with the new record."

Pollard narrowed the competition down to Warner Bros. and Matador, but took seven or eight months to make the final decision. The band signed with Gold Mountain Entertainment's Aaron Blitzstein for management to aid in arriving at a decision.

In the end, Matador won. Says Pollard, "Matador has WEA distribution, so if we need it, we have it, and we get the best of both worlds, and I think they will let us do exactly what we want to do."

Although "Alien Lanes" will be Guided By Voices' first Matador album under an agreement reached with Scat, the band is still treating it as its final Scat release.

"It was like the last of the trilogy of things we did for Scat. 'Bee Thousand,' 'Vampire On Titus,' and 'Alien Lanes' all have a similar feel. I felt after that, it was time to move on and try something different and, maybe, go into a big studio."

Pollard describes the album the band is working on as "more slow and more anthemic stuff." The album is being recorded on 24-track at Steve Albini's studio in Chicago and Easley Studio in Memphis. "But there's some stuff that we're not crazy about, so we're going to take it back to a 4-track to do the vocals," Pollard says. "We get this killer vocal sound with the 4-track."

Still, the new album, tentatively titled "The Flying Party Is Here" or "The Power Of Suck," is a departure. "Most of the songs are between two and four minutes," says Pollard. "On 'Alien Lanes,' most of them are between three seconds and a minute-and-a-half. I just wanted to cram as many crazy pop songs as I could on one record. I wanted to create a double album's worth of songs on one record."

Yet the unconventional recording technique of "Alien Lanes" provides a challenge for Matador. Despite favorable press from such publications as Rolling Stone, Spin, Option, and Melody Maker, the airplay of GBV has almost exclusively been limited to college stations. The lo-fi production of "Alien Lanes" is unlikely to change that.

Even with its limited radio appeal, "Bee Thousand" has sold an estimated 30,000 copies, according to Griffin, who says that is an impressive number for a small label like Scat.

At the Dayton, Ohio-based Trader Vic's, GBV regularly tops both the store's charts dedicated to local artists, and its larger chart, which accounts for all the store's sales. "We do extremely well with GBV," says manager Mike Justice, who estimates the store has sold 300-400 copies of "Bee Thousand" and up to 1,000 different GBV products, including singles, albums, T-shirts, and posters.

"There's a lot of momentum already there on the mom-and-pop retail level and at college radio, and the last tour did really well," says Matador co-president Chris Lombardi.

To help make "Alien Lanes" a little more appealing to radio, the band plans to rerecord the album track "Motor Away" on 24-track, while it is in the studio working on the album due this fall, says Matador director of radio promotion Kris Gillespie. Scat used a similar plan in promoting "Bee Thousand." The band rerecorded the track "I Am A Scientist."

To date, Matador says, the band has received airplay on 145 college stations, including KUSF San Francisco and WUOG Athens, Ga.

"We're not going to commercial radio immediately [with the track]," Gillespie says. "They're a relatively new band, and it's going to take some time. For a lot of commercial radio stations, this is the first time that they have heard the band, despite all the press."

On the video front, a two-song video for "Auditorium" and "Motor Away" is planned. Lombardi says the clip will be serviced to regional video outlets and MTV.

Aside from the video and the rerecorded single, Matador will distribute a GBV bottle opener, which reflects the band's enthusiasm for beer-drinking. The promotional item will be sent to key retailers and college-radio programmers.

On the tour front, the band will play a March 18 showcase with Bettie Serveert, Yo La Tengo, and Railroad Jerk in Austin, Texas. In April, it will launch a full-scale club tour.

Scat, meanwhile, plans to promote "Box" with a 24-track, 70-minute sampler CD, featuring four to five songs from each album.

"The main thing about Guided By Voices, regardless of the steamroller of publicity, is that they are a really important rock'n'roll band," says Griffin. "Ten or 20 years from now, they will still matter."

Pollard remains optimistic about GBV's commercial chances: "Maybe with the [fall] album we'll get something on the Billboard charts. We did pretty well on the college charts last year, but 'Alien Lanes' is still a lo-fi record. I don't know how well a lo-fi record can do."

JAMAICAN CONCERT HONORS MARLEY'S 50TH

Most acts sang one or two of their own hits, plus at least one of the hundreds of songs Marley made famous.

The Jamaican government also played its part in the event. Prime Minister P.J. Patterson, who joined Rita Marley on stage to cut a birthday cake, announced that Feb. 6 will be Bob Marley Day in Jamaica. And the government confirmed it will issue a series of four Marley stamps and is minting a JA$50 coin with Marley's image on it.

Among the performance highlights was an appearance by "Melrose Place" actress Vanessa Williams (not the noted Mercury Records singer). A devoted Marley fan, Williams performed a lively "Waiting In Vain" and an infectious version of "One Drop."

Reggae veteran Toots Hibbert, still one of Jamaica's most dynamic performers after three decades of making music, burst onstage with a rousing version of "Three Little Birds"

DJ Tony Rebel, a leading force in taking Jamaican dancehall music away from the often highly sexual and violent lyrics that have dominated the genre for the past decade, delivered a spirited three-number set that culminated in "Small Axe."

But the most solid and satisfying performance of the evening was provided by Mystic Revealers, one of the few serious roots groups to emerge in Jamaica in recent years, which won over many new fans with powerful versions of "Natural Mystic" and "We And Dem," before launching into its own biggest hit, "Religion."

Veteran roots group Wailing Souls, now just a duo, performed a lively "I Shot The Sheriff" and a lovely, slow version of "No Woman No Cry."

Two of Marley's younger sons, Damien and Kymani—now performing under the names Junior Gong and Maestro, respectively—performed an exuberant DJ set in which they took a tongue-in-cheek dig at their father's nonmusical activities by slipping in a line about him being a "bedroom bully." They then paid a slightly more serious vocal tribute to him on "Crisis."

Ziggy Marley & the Melody Makers, the most famous of Marley's offspring, offered a distinctly uneven set that included their own "Tumbling Down," their father's "War" and

"Rebel Music," and more-than-passable versions of "Soul Rebel"—with Stephen Marley on vocals—and "Sessalassie Is The Chapel."

The Wailers Band, rated by many as the finest in reggae history, was given the respect it deserved when they came on stage to perform "Positive Vibration" and "Get Up Stand Up," with Junior Marvin taking lead vocals. Other surviving Wailers onstage were bass master Aston "Family Man" Barrett, keyboardist Earl "Wya" Lindo, guitarist Al Anderson, and percussionist Alvin "Seeco" Patterson.

The Wailers were joined by I Threes—Rita Marley, Judy Mowatt, and Marcia Griffith—for "He's A Legend," "Three Little Birds," and a rousing "Buffalo Soldier," before launching into "One Love" and inviting all the other performers to come back on stage for "Jammin'."

Williams, Carlene Davis, and two members of Mystic Revealers joined in, but none of the younger Marleys participated in the finale.

Also performing at the festivities were veteran Jamaican Nyabinghi drumming group Ras Michael & the Sons Of Negus; Dub poet Mutabaruka; saxophone virtuoso Arturo Tapin, from Barbados; Davis, one of Jamaica's leading female vocalists; Yami Bolo; Third World minus lead singer Bunny Rugs; and Jamaica's most famous horn player, Dean Fraser.
